HALLOWED SPOTS REMEMBERED.

Weymouth Pays Tribute to 500 Departed Heroes.

There is a sameness in the observance of Memorial Day year after year and yet the "Old, Old Story is Ever New" and while in many respects the story of this year may not differ very much from that of other years it is not less significant nor freighted with less deep feeling of reverence for the Fallen Brave.

The order of the day was along the same line as that which has worked so satisfactorily for the past few years and marching was reduced materially from that of a few years ago.

The St. Francis Xavier, Ashmont, Reed, Thomas and Blanchard cemeteries were visited by detail in the early morning and tributes of floral offerings made with other brief exercises.

At 8.30 a. m. Thomas' Corner, North Weymouth, became the center of attraction for there the line of the day was to be formed and made up under the supervision of Andrew Culley, Commander of Post 58 G. A. R.; Maj. F. A. Bicknell, chief of staff; David Dunbar, officer of the day; Oliver Burrell, Adjutant and Elbridge Nash, quartermaster.

The line consisted of Chief Butler and other police officers; Carter's band, 24 pieces; Sons of Veterans, L. Carleton White, captain; Battalion Reynolds Post 58 G. A. R., Co. A., I. H. Walker, S.V.C., captain; Co. B., L. W. Cain, J.V.C., captain. Boy Scouts, Troop 1, E. M. Vaughn, master; 2, J. W. McFann; 3, F. N. Blanchard; 4, W. E. Welch; children from the Athens school in charge of Principal G. M. Goulart.

Thus organized the line proceeded to the cemetery where regular exercises were held and then cars taken for Lincoln square where the line reformed, children from the local school, C. Y. Berry, principal taking a place in the line. Village cemetery received the accustomed tributes and honors, then cars were taken for South Weymouth.

Line reformed at Main and Columbian streets, children from Howe, Bates, and other schools, E. N. Hollis, principal joined the line and assisted in the work at Highland cemetery after which a march was made to Columbian square and cars taken to Mt. Hope cemetery where assistance was rendered by Pratt school children, Miss L. M. Murphy, principal and then followed a trip to G. A. R. hall for the noon hour and dinner.

As the column was lined up at the hall on its arrival every veteran was decorated with a pink at the hands of members of Dorothea Dix Tent D. of V. and they also later in the day placed as a special token a potted plant on the grave of every soldier buried in Fairmount cemetery.

The dinner hour was a pleasant one. While the seating capacity at the tables was tested to the limit there seemed to be no limit to the viands served. Mrs. D. M. Kidder was chairman of the dinner committee and a large corps of assistants joined her in seeing that every one was well provided for.

An open air concert by the band followed the dinner and then cars were taken to Fairmount cemetery which was the last on the list and at the conclusion of the exercises there an even 500 graves of the men who followed the flag from 1861 to 1865 had been decorated in Weymouth.

The closing exercises of the day were on the Clapp Memorial field and in the Clapp Memorial hall. The dress parade, Bradford Hawes acting Adjutant was a pretty sight and admired by a large number of spectators and then as many as could assemble in the audience room.

Commander Culley opened the meeting with a few remarks on the events of the day and thanked the different organizations which had helped in the service and then introduced Comrade J. M. Whitcomb as master of ceremonies.

Mr. Whitcomb began with a brief address and reading of a poem by a former well known Weymouth citizen, Hon. E. C. Bumpus, then followed recitations by Miss Margaret Culley, Lincoln's Gettysburg address by P. I. Waldo Turner, selections by Mrs. Estella Richards, music by the band, patriotic songs by the audience and an address by Rev. Edward T. Ford which will no doubt be treasured up by every soldier as a master word picture of their achievement and what they have left to posterity. America by the band and audience, taps by Corps bugler Theodor Keith and the 1914 Memorial of Post 58 G. A. R. was done.

We add a few notes to the above. The Boy Scouts have come to the front as a no small factor. They made a fine appearance in the line, rendered valuable assistance in the work, furnished their own car for transportation, furnished their own rations, spent the noon hour at the Congregational church in East Weymouth where they were received and entertained by the la-

ELECTION OF OFFICERS AND RECEPTION.

Weymouth Choral Society Entertains Associate Members at C. M. A. Last Monday Evening.

The Weymouth Choral society closed a very successful season last Monday evening, when the annual election of officers was held and a reception was tendered to the associate members of the society and the orchestra, which assisted at the two fine concerts presented the past winter.

At seven thirty o'clock the business meeting was held and the following officers were elected: president, Elmer E. Leonard; vice presidents, W. L. Swan and Mrs. Harriett B. Batchelder; secretary, Mrs. Ella C. Richards; treasurer, William H. Pratt; librarian, Miss Nellie M. Holbrook; business committee, William A. Hodges chairman, Mrs. Ellen M. Drew, John Ahearn, Mrs. Joshua P. Holbrook and Myron P. Ford; membership committee, Mrs. Jennie B. Worster, Miss Elizabeth Moore, Mrs. Robert S. Hoffman, Mrs. J. Herbert Libby, Mrs. William B. Dasha; Miss Lucy E. Reed, Miss Grace Crape, Mrs. W. T. Seabury, Mrs. George Davis, Henry J. Kennedy, Mrs. C. P. Whittle, Irving S. Horton, Edmund Sheehy and William Wall.

The guests were cordially received by the President E. E. Leonard and the other officers of the society.

At eight o'clock a musical program was given which was highly enjoyed by all. The program consisted of the selection, "On To The Battle, On", from "Joan of Arc" by a chorus; "Hallelujah" chorus from the "Messiah"; group of songs by P. J. Fennell; solos by Mrs. Percy L. Bicknell; solos by Chester Madam, with violin obligato by Silas Rousseau; and violin solos by Mr. Rousseau. The accompanists were Mrs. William A. Hodges and Mrs. William Fitzsimmons. The chorus selections were directed by J. W. Calderwood musical conductor of the society.

Refreshments were served during the evening in charge of P. J. Fennell, Mrs. Robert S. Hoffman, W. T. Seabury, Mrs. Ellen Drew and John Ahearn. The closing feature was dancing with Mrs. Fannie Merchant's orchestra of three pieces furnishing music.

Visiting Nurses.

A movement has been started to establish a district nurse in the Weymouth. Nearly all the towns in this part of Mass. have one or more district nurses. Abington has just perfected an organization and has a district nurse at work, and her salary pledged. Rockland has an enthusiastic organization, with a nurse doing splendid work. Whitman has had a nurse for several years. Brockton has three district nurses. Braintree has a nurse and a very successful organization behind her. The idea of visiting nurses, is not a new one. The first experiment was made by William Rathbone in England in 1859. Since that time, it has extended to practically all English speaking countries and with certain modifications, of other countries. In the beginning visiting nursing was confined to the indigent sick. With the development of visiting nurse work, however, it was realized that its value, would be even greater for the masses of the population including those not belonging to the dependent classes. While it now seems necessary in most places to depend upon contributions, for the salaries of the visiting nurses, the ideal to work for is a self supporting visiting nurse. In most towns, an arrangement is made, to combine with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. which provides nurses for its policy holders. All that Weymouth needs is the Get-Together-Spirit, to make this movement a success.

Williams-Smith.

Harold Eugene Williams, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lyman C. Williams, and Miss Bertha May Smith were married last Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Fuller in Braintree. Rev. Mr. Oakman Patton, pastor of Emanuel Episcopal church officiated. The maid of honor was Miss Almira E. Fuller and the groom's brother, Ellis Williams was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Williams will reside in this town.

dies of the Christian Endeavor society who added to their rations coffee and ice cream.

Nor would we close without saying a word in regard to the mounted scouts of the 8th Mass. Infantry, who joined the line at South Weymouth and continued through the day. The commander, Frederick G. Bauer of South Weymouth and Lt. Austin are to be congratulated on the fine appearance they made and thanked for the interest they took in the work.

FARMERS' BALL.

Large Crowd in Attendance at Annual Event Held by Weymouth Council 729, K. of C. Last Friday Night in Bates Opera House.

In spite of the handicap of having the Town Hall burn at the eleventh hour, the Weymouth Council Knights of Columbus showed the staff they were made of by holding the Farmers' Ball last Friday night as per schedule, the only change being the hall, Bates opera house being the scene of the annual success of the "K of C fellers" instead of the historic "Town Barn."

The members of the committee in charge of the affair were up bright and early last Friday morning and flyers, street car signs and large posters were distributed through the town galore and by noon time everyone in town knew that the annual "Farmers' Dance" was on for that night, parade and all the rest of the "fixins."

The parade started from Jackson square at 7.30 o'clock with Peter Gallant and Frank McCarthy on horseback in the lead. Chief of Police Butler and officers Gaughen, Pratt, Baker and Fitzgerald came next, followed by the Stetson Shoe Co. band, George White leader, and about 75 Knights of Columbus in "Rube" costumes and hayricks filled with young people, mostly "gals." The line of march was over Broad street to Lincoln square, down Washington street to Washington square to Bates opera house.

At the opera house, the band was dismissed from further service and then the annual farmers "walk around" was held, led this year by Grand Knight Edward Butler with his sister Miss Alice Butler. They were followed by Joseph Kelley and Miss Alice Gorman of South Boston and about 70 couples. Previous to the march a "rube" orchestra, composed of Knights of Columbus gave a "country corners concert" which was highly amusing to all present. M. Killory was the recognized leader of the "musick dispensers."

The prizes for the best costumes in the "grand walkaround" were awarded to Joseph Kelley, first gents; Miss Alice Butler, first ladies; John Holly, second gents and Miss Harriet Bishop, second ladies. In the street parade the prize was awarded to the Crescent Social Club of East Weymouth for the best "rig."

After the grand march, a dance order of eighteen "jigs," "tew steps" etc., was started with "Bill" Cuff's musickers to the number of ten furnishing music. The dance orders were a decided novelty, being listed as "seed catalogues" with each dance given as some sort of a fruit or vegetable. The "Blood Beet Quadrille," the "Red Ear Tew Step" and the "Swiss Chard Waltz" were among the most popular varieties of the evenings enjoyment.

The dancing was in charge of Edward Butler, floor director; George Ellard, Frank McCarthy, Thomas J. White, assistant floor directors; Thomas Noonan, chief of aids; J. Walter Cronin, James A. Knox, George McGowan, Daniel Looney, J. H. Curran, James Kelly, Joseph Kelley, M. Coffey, Alfred Sheehy, John Lyons and Joseph McDonald aids.

The committee in charge of the annual ball was: Edward Butler, chairman; Thomas Noonan, secretary; James A. Knox, treasurer; Daniel P. Looney, chairman of parade committee, assisted by George Ellard, William Wall and William Fitzsimmons, refreshments; Joseph Kelley and Ed. White, printing; Edmund White, programs; J. Walter Cronin, transportation; Henry Tobin, Ambrose Boyle, David Kearns and William Wall, advertising committee.

Refreshments were served in the balcony through out the evening.

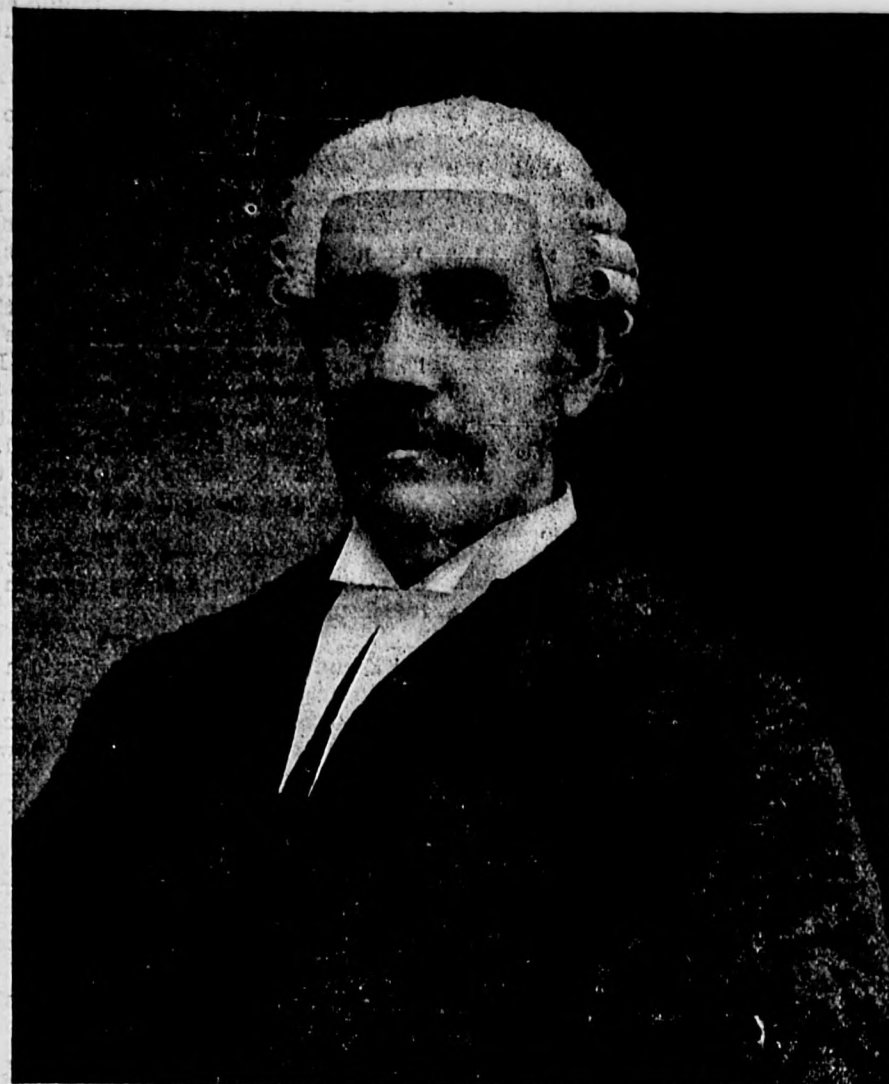

While the Farmers' Ball of 1914 did not attract quite such a large crowd as in former years, the burning of the Town Hall causing the loss in numbers, a large sum was netted from the event for use in the sick benefit work of the order. The committees in charge are to be congratulated on the success of the annual ball, conducted after severe handicaps at the eleventh hour.

John E. Cross, Dead.

After a short illness Mr. John E. Cross passed away on Decoration Day at his home on Essex street, East Weymouth. Mr. Cross was operated on at St. Elizabeth's hospital, Boston, May 19th and failed steadily. Deceased was born in Weymouth and always made his home there. Besides his wife he left five daughters, Mrs. John Neilson, Irene, Hazel, Agnes and Alice to mourn the loss of a dear husband and kind father. Funeral Mass was at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Monday morning and burial at St. Francis Xavier cemetery.

Hands Clasp Across the Ocean

Our Own Weymouth and Weymouth, England, Join in Celebration

H. A. HUXTABLE, TOWN CLERK, WEYMOUTH, ENGLAND

This is the week in which we join Weymouth, England, in the celebration of a historic event which gives the name which we have borne for nearly three hundred years and which we can hand down to posterity with a good degree of pride.

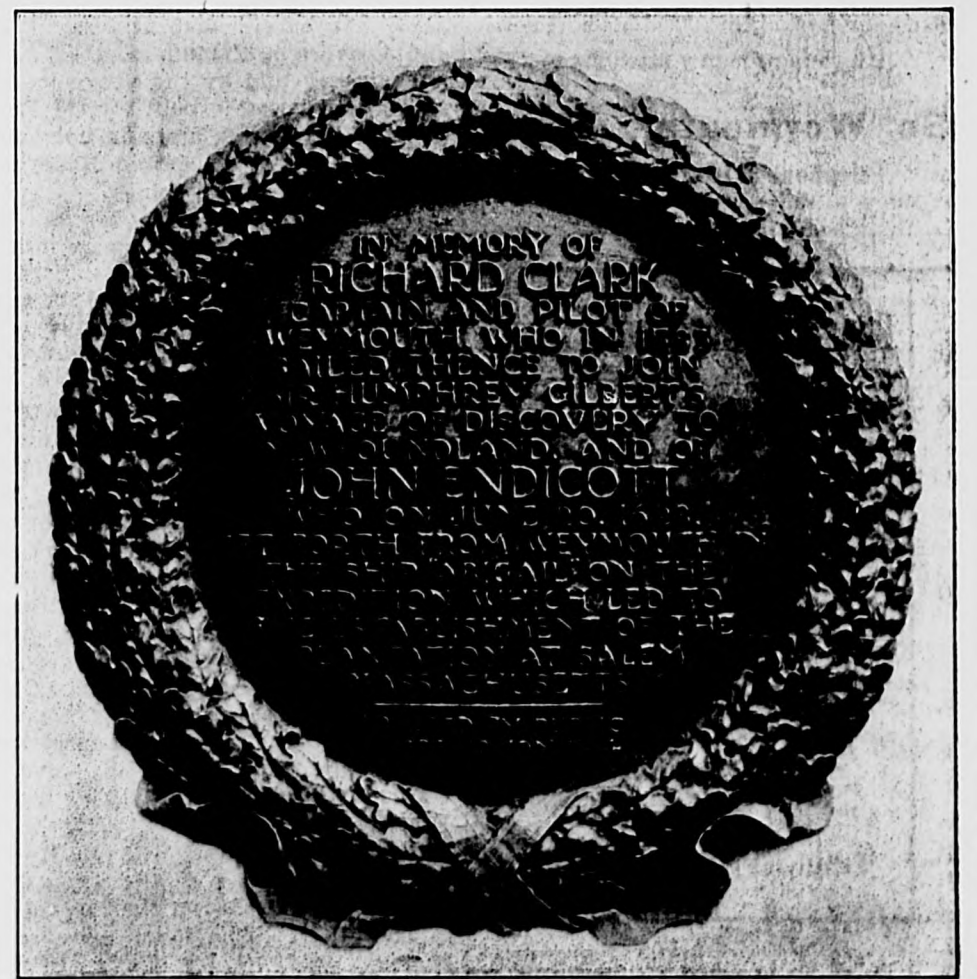

In June 1628 there embarked from Weymouth, England, the ship Abigail which brought to these shores John Endicott, who became the first Governor of Massachusetts Bay Colony and many people who joined those who landed here in 1623 and began the settlement of a territory which became Weymouth and in 1635 was incorporated as a town by that name and the territory has remained the same to this day. While we say "the same" we would not say that our Weymouth has not grown. It has kept pace with the times, is no longer a sparsely settled wilderness but any up-to-date town teeming with beautiful villages, elegant homes, churches, schools, steam and electric roads, water system, gas and electric light plants, shore front and inland scenery unrivaled for beauty on the Atlantic coast. So much for our Weymouth and now we turn to the Weymouth of England and give some data for which we are indebted to the Town Clerk H. G. Huxtable whose picture accompanies this article.

"The history of Weymouth can be traced back to the days of Druidical altars and Phoenician pottery making, but it may more properly be said to have begun with the Roman times. distinct evidences of which are to be found in the town and neighborhood, notably at Preston, a mile away, where there are the remains of a Roman Villa. Since that time Weymouth has witnessed many stirring, tragical and intensely interesting incidents.

In 1319, it first sent members to Parliament, and 28 years later it sent 20 ships to join the fleet which sailed to besiege Calais. In 1340 Edward III., the hero of Cressy, landed at Weymouth on his way to London to persuade, threaten or cajole a reluctant Parliament into granting further supplies for the continuance of the French wars.

"1588 was a stirring year for Weymouth as it was indeed for the whole of England for the English ships were being mustered to give battle to the Spanish Armada.

ENGLAND'S TABLET TO JOHN ENDICOTT

Weymouth's contribution to the outnumbered but victorious fleet was six vessels; and it is pleasant to suppose they were instrumental in the capture of the two Spanish men-of-war that were brought into Weymouth harbor. But we must exchange our historical musings for the examination of the Weymouth of today. The most curtailed account of the part Weymouth has played in history would, however, be incomplete without some mention of George III., who, after his long illness, took up his residence here at Gloucester Lodge, where now stands the Gloucester hotel and the County Club.

"Emerging from the railway station in King street, the first view of Weymouth is truly enchanting and standing by the imposing Jubilee clock on the Esplanade, the glories of the bay are suddenly revealed. To the left curves amile or so of well kept esplanade, which is succeeded by the undulating cliffs of Weymouth Bay; to the right the Esplanade continues as far as the Pier, and the view is terminated by the bluff projection of the Nothe, which is crowned by one of the most formidable forts of the Channell coast.

"But this picture may again be suddenly changed, as if by a magic stroke of cinematography. The blue waters of Weymouth Bay are not only fluttering with the white wings of innumerable sailing craft, but in the back-ground are the grim looking grey hulls of a great fleet of Dreadnoughts that have stolen silently in for anchorage, as they did when His Majesty, the King, inspected the mighty British Armada in Weymouth Bay in 1912. Such briefly is our first view of Weymouth from the front; and many a coast resort of no little popularity has little more, if as much, to show its visitors. But here in Weymouth, we are within reach of many a feast for the eye, unique in character, and of absorbing interest.

"[Educational Facilities.] These are excellent. Weymouth College enjoys a high reputation, preparing boys for the army and navy, and for the Universities. Among others may be mentioned Weymouth High school premises, consisting of two good houses adjoining and intercommunicating, are beautifully situated two minutes walk from the sea and have bright and well-ventilated class rooms and bedrooms and large dining hall. The school is well equipped with all modern educational appliances. There are Boys', Girls' and Kindergarten Departments."

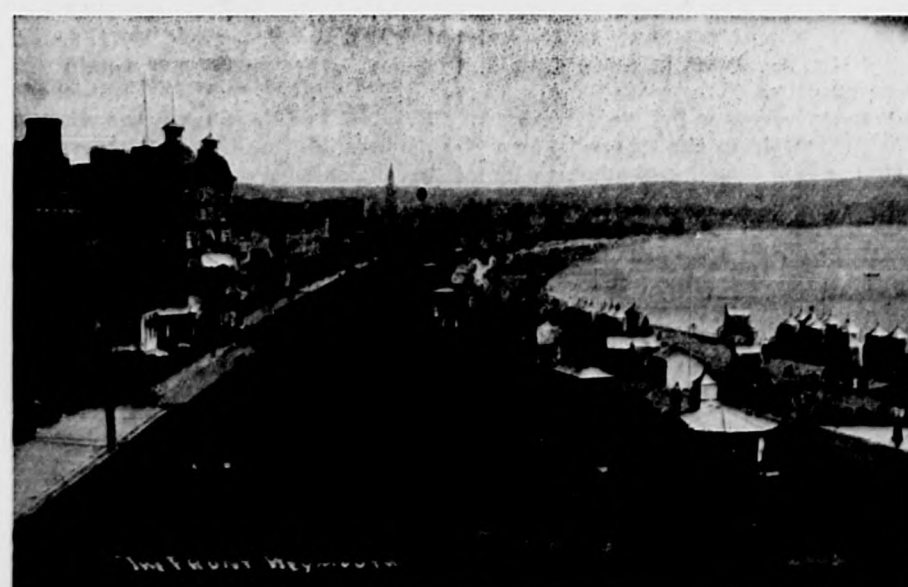

This week we are across the water in the person of Hon. Louis A. Cook whom the Town selected to represent it in the celebration and unveiling of a tablet erected to the memory of John Endicott and Weymouth, England's historic Pilot, Captain Richard Clark, who sailed from the same port in the Sir Humphrey Gilbert voyage of discovery in 1583.

Jefferson School Entertainment.

Under the auspices of the faculty of the Jefferson school of East Weymouth, a miscellaneous entertainment was given in G. A. R. hall, last Wednesday evening. The affair was directed by Miss Persis Tuttle, principal of the school, assisted by Miss Melissa Chase, Miss Ruth Reidy, Miss Marguerite Connors, Miss Alice Connors, Miss Inez Wheaton and Miss Ida Cronin.

There was folk dancing by the different grades of the school, solo dancing by Miss Mary Hoffman and Miss Leslie Lovell, recitations by grades 1, 2, 3, and 4, and by Anna Curtin, Isabelle Loud, Rachael Dangle, Louise Welch, Eleanor Stetson, Mildred Holbrook, Louise Smith, Isabelle McCobb, Mary Hughes and Henry Lyons. The flag salute and the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" were closing features. A large crowd was present.

Doubt as to New Tax Measure
Passing Through House

SOME STATISTICS ON LABOR

Bay State Getting Large Number of Unskilled People and Some With No Occupation, Though Textile Centres Get Large Proportion of Aliens—
Harvard Man Spoils Charter Plans

No more care was ever spent in preparing legislation than has been spent upon the constitutional amendment to provide for a low tax rate upon securities such as stocks and bonds and evidences of indebtedness. And yet a great deal of doubt is expressed by the friends of the measure about its going through the house. That is where its real opposition lies on account of the fact that it takes a two-thirds majority to send it through.

Governor Walsh says that the amendment, which has been worked out through conferences between himself, the tax department and the members of the committee on taxation is as well considered a resolve as he ever saw and hardly less important than the railroad legislation.

By sharply limiting the power of the legislature to placing rates upon two classes of personal property it is a protective measure. At the same time it is elastic enough to give a chance for liberal legislation which shall not drive property away from Massachusetts to any one of the New England states where there are more liberal tax laws.

All this week the governor has been in conference with friends in the house. But the opposition of Martin Lomasney still continues. If the measure is defeated the governor's plan for a constitutional convention is sure to receive added support as a tax measure.

Textile Workers Come Here
 The continued importance of Massachusetts as a textile manufacturing state is shown by the current report of the bureau of statistics, wherein it appears that over two-fifths, or 43.5 percent of the textile workers coming to this country, chose this state as their destination, while 27.6 percent of the weavers and spinners coming into the country were also on their way here.

This does not mean, however, that Massachusetts is getting a very large proportion of skilled workmen. Only 8.1 percent of the skilled workmen admitted to the United States came last year to Massachusetts. The occupations showing the largest numbers were tailors, 1632; shoemakers, 1235; carpenters and joiners, 1221, and weavers and spinners, 1079.

The story told by the above figures seems to be that except for the matter of textiles this state is not being made subject to an extraordinary invasion of labor of any class.

It is of interest to observe the rather large number of negro aliens coming to Massachusetts. There were 739 in 1909, 937 in 1910, 1341 in 1911, 1290 in 1912, 1173 in 1913 and a total of 5480 in the entire five years.

Many Unskilled
 During the past twenty years there has been considerable variation in the total number of immigrants to the country and to the state. The number did not exceed 343,267 for the whole country during any one of the years from 1894 to 1899. In 1900 the number admitted was 448,572 and from year to year thereafter, with the exception of 1904, it increased by large additions until 1907, when there were 1,285,349 admitted. This was a record year for both country and state.

In 1908 the number admitted to the United States decreased by over 500,000 as compared with 1907, and 1909 showed even a smaller total than 1908. In 1909 the number increased to 1,041,570. This fell to 878,578 in 1911 and to 838,172 in 1912. In 1913 it increased to 1,197,182, or to a total of only about 88,000 less than the record of 1907.

Massachusetts received 85,583 in 1907 and 106,674 in 1913. The Massachusetts story for the figures quoted above seem to indicate that while Massachusetts textiles are getting an enormous percentage of the labor coming to this country, the state is also getting an uncomfortably large number of unskilled people and people with no occupation at all.

And all of this has a part in explaining why there are radical and socialistic measures in abundance and more petitions every year for all kinds of relief than ever before.

"Spilled the Beans"
 Colonel Jeremiah Desmond, chief of scouts for the Boston charter association, says that Professor William B. Munro of Harvard "spilled the beans" when he talked the other day at the state house on business administration for cities.

The professor favors the Newport plan of city council which has at large and districts features. But by skillful questioning on the part of one of the backers of the Lomasney district charter bill for Boston he was made to appear as favoring a district bill for Boston.

It is explained that his answers, taken with what other things he said, would not have conveyed that impression. But by themselves they did convey it and the friends of the district charter bill were not slow to realize their opportunity.

Professor Munro thus became a storm centre in the ensuing debates upon the charter bill. It was very distressing because he is a member of the charter association and was very much against the passage of the Lomasney bill.

The bill is being supported by some pretty fair comment among a lot of people who have not cared to become involved in the controversy. A lot of people have wondered at the success of the ward 8 leader with his bill, and this is one strong reason.

Spoiled the Resolve
 The municipal ice and coal bill met with an untimely end after Walter McLane's amendment had been placed upon it in the senate. At the time when the McLane amendment went on the resolve it certainly looked as if the cities and the towns of the state were going to be given the right to open up ice houses and coal yards.

Then the amendment added to the list groceries, meats, vegetables, hay and grain, dry goods and clothing. This means that the municipality would be given the general right to go into any mercantile business.

Why Tax is Large
 When people ask why the state tax is so large and growing larger the answer should be given that the state expenditures have tripled since the state tax began to grow, and the state revenues have not increased sufficiently to meet the increase. Therefore it must be raised from taxation.

In 1908 the costs of running the departments were $6,700,000. Last year they were over $17,000,000. The inheritance tax yields about $2,500,000 of revenue, and about $1,500,000 more than the collateral legacy tax, which is now part of the inheritance tax.

These big expenses are making the taxation situation a sharp issue in the legislature.

Other Reasons
 Fifteen years ago a man paid a tax of $10 or $15 a thousand on his property. That was too high upon securities yielding 4 percent. But now he pays $20 and as high as $25. Wakefield this year will have a tax rate of $25 a thousand, it is said.

What makes the expenses so high? First, it is the same thing generally that makes the cost of living high, a cheapening standard of value, due to increased production of gold.

Secondly, it is piling upon the state undreamed functions in administration. Under the second head come multiplication of boards, increased inspection, pensions for everybody, supervision of everything.

This is the true analysis of the coming state tax of $11,000,000, against $1,500,000 in 1898.

Cole Going Slow
 Charles H. Cole, the new adjutant general, is not going out for a whirlwind record in his new office. He says he didn't want to take it and doesn't want to stay in it any longer than he can help. He accepted the place only after a great deal of urging from Governor Walsh and a sort of promise of relief in the near future.

Colonel Cole is acceptable to all of the militia. His executive ability and pleasant manners make the appointment a very desirable one. His first task is to get the militia in touch with the war department.

Ward Unimaginative
 Senator Ward of Buckland is not getting excited over his boom for state treasurer. He has a first rate record as senate chairman of the ways and means committee and, if inclined, could undoubtedly get the Republican nomination for treasurer, inasmuch as former State Treasurer Stevens would support him.

But Senator Ward has the reputation of being a canny man. That he could be elected there is not much doubt. Nevertheless he is canny and places on the state ticket cost both time and money these days. But if there were to be a Progressive in the field—well, that might make some difference.

Somebody Save Mack
 Somebody ought to save Senator Harry Mack of North Adams from the members of his own party. Frank Horgan refers to him as "the learned jurist from the Berkshires" and as "the fount of judicial wisdom." And now comes Fisher of Essex and bows to the "legal acumen and profound scholarly attainments of the senator from the western part of the state."

Harry is a pretty good "feller." He is sound, kind and obliging and perfectly successful as a senator. This is merely the Republican point of view about Harry. If they ever get the view expressed by Messrs. Horgan and Fisher, they probably won't send him to congress one of these fine days. And word comes from Pittsfield that that's what some of Harry's friends talk of doing.

Trolley Merger Again
 The trolley merger proposed by President Sullivan of the Bay State trolley line and by ex-Mayor Fitzgerald is not one of the things that will bear fruit this year.

Mr. Sullivan's suggestion was made for the solution of the whole local transportation problem, including service and fares. The public service commission and the metropolitan affairs committee are groaning under the weight of petitions for 5-cent fares. And the Elevated, whose limit is 5 cents over its own lines, states openly that fares ought to be increased rather than diminished.

It is a good prediction that a general trolley merger of roads contingent upon the Boston Elevated system will be one of the big questions for the legislature next year.

SURVEYS MADE AND PLANS PREPARED FOR THE LAND COURT

ON THE FARM

Read this column and you can have it delivered at your house with something new every week for a full year by sending $2.00 to this office now.

Poultry reared with free range of orchard and meadow are the largest and finest in plumage and symmetry.

To start a new rhubarb bed, plant pieces of roots that have one eye each. Stalks should not be cut until the second year.

There are many little devices for outwitting the bugs. Tobacco stems strewn on the ground at the base of rose plants will help to keep away insects. The same remedy has been used successfully by cucumber growers.

Professor Cook advises painting the trunks of apple trees with soft soap about a fortnight after the blossoms have fallen as a means of keeping the apple tree borer from getting in his work.

The eggplant can be grown in our gardens very easily if we will start the plants under glass before setting them out, or buy the plants already started from the seedman. They should be set out in May or June into the open ground, but not before then.

With soft feeds in warm weather, supply what the young birds will clean up perfectly within a few minutes. Any left over will quickly sour, and sour feeds cause bowel trouble.

In the matter of feet, horses are like other animals and human beings. Some strong, and some weak and defective. Some seldom have any feet trouble, while others are bothered with sore or lame feet practically all the time if their feet are not properly cared for.

Although annual vegetables are very important, some of the good perennials, such as rhubarb and asparagus, are really, better for a side line, or special crop, on the general farm. The advantage of growing perennial vegetables is that once planted they will grow and thrive in the same place for many years without change.

The great beauty and economy of the hydraulic ram for pumping water is that it costs nothing for power. It is like perpetual motion, as it works by itself and through itself, so long as an elevated supply of water feeds it. However, the ram works on a similar principle to the water wheel or turbine. The force of the fall of water is what gives it power to work. If a dam is built across a perennial brook so as to create a fall of its water, the ram may be used to pump water up hill.

On every farm a great number of common tools are kept. There should be some kind of a room or small building for housing them, which also may serve as the farm shop or workroom. In this workroom there should be a bench for working on and holding a number of things, to which is fastened a vise, saw-clamp, crank tool grinder, and such tools and machines as will be of direct aid in all the work.

The time is coming when more than one crop must be grown on the same land in one year. Rye and some other crop can be grown and harvested from the same land easily during the same year without injuring the soil. A rye crop can be harvested in the spring and a crop of early-maturing corn can be planted and matured on the land the same summer and fall. Late potatoes can easily follow rye, and so can cowpeas, other legumes, buckwheat, sorghum, kafir and a number of other quick maturing crops.

Seventy-five degrees is too warm to churn. The butter is too soft and oily to gather in the churn and it is beaten into a smooth emulsion which swells and froths by the air that is beaten into it. From 62 degrees to 65 degrees is the right temperature for winter churning.

In caring for turkeys do not feed too much corn. People talk about black head when it's only indigestion. Feed some wheat and oats, but turkeys do not need a great deal—just enough to teach them that you are their friend not an enemy.

The latest thing, according to Popular Mechanics, is steam-cured hay, which makes the farmer independent of cloudy or rainy weather in haying time. The green grass is hauled to the hay factory, unloaded at one end of the plant, and, thirty minutes later, emerges at the other end perfectly cured, ready for the barn or bale press. In case of rain, a canvas cover insures arrival at the barn without wetting.

There are wonderful possibilities for food supply and extra cash income on the general farm in small fruits and various vegetables. Small fruits of several kinds have become universally popular, especially strawberries, raspberries and blackberries. The last named is one of the oldest and best favorites. The vegetables, of which there is a long list, are equally as important. Some of the most popular vegetables—celery, for instance—can be grown successfully only with favored soil and climatic conditions, yet nearly all of them can be grown right well under average normal conditions.

Water is a very important thing on the land when crops are growing, yet it may become detrimental if the lay of the land is such as to cause surplus water to stand in the soil. Surplus water standing in the soil for a good portion of every year causes the soil to become sour, a condition detrimental to the growth of many field crops. Poorly drained flat land is also usually too wet to be worked early in the season, and during many years the surplus water is so great that crops on the land are a failure. Draining flat, wet and swampy lands is the only sure way of making them productive and valuable. Good drainage will nearly always make very valuable land out of almost worthless flat, wet land.

SHOWING CONFIDENCE.

It Has a Strong Influence in Making Business and Good Times.

Precipitations about the value of optimism are a trifle bromidic, so instead of hurrahing for optimism I have a few instances of the influence that comes from putting a good face steadily toward bad fortune, and contrariwise the bad effect of mourning because business is not better.

"How's trade?" I asked a stationer. "Trade!" he exclaimed. "Trade! There isn't any. Things are rotten." Now, if I had had any intention of buying anything from him, which I had not, that depressing statement would have gone a long way to keep me from buying.

"How's things?" I asked the boss of a men's furnishing store a few hours later. "Little quiet, just now," he smiled; "but I can't complain. We have run ahead of last year and prospects are good." I felt like buying a new hat because the cheerfulness of his reply made me feel that money was coming to me.

"How's trade?" I asked a tobacconist. "Good," he replied emphatically. "Little slow today, but trade is mighty good with me, coming right along," and I bought a cigar.

Confidence is the influence that makes good times because it quickens trade. But if all business men were to croak about bad business, would not that influence make us all very careful about doing anything? We would all want to sit tight and wait. The way to get good times is to face the world hopefully and go to work. The croaker is a trade killer.—Inland Stationer.

HAD NO SENSE OF HUMOR.

He Couldn't Clearly See the Joke the Boys Had on Him.

Some people have absolutely no sense of humor. A little London urchin ran into a baker's shop and, placing a half-penny on the counter, asked nervously and timidly, "Mister, 'ave you a 'alfpenny buster (bun)?"

"Yes, my little man. Here is one quite hot."

"Thanks, mister. Would you mind a-shovin' it down my back?"

"Down your back, my little man! Why down your back?"

"Cos, sir, I'm only a little un, and if those chaps outside know I've a buster they'll take it, and I am so 'ungry, I am."

"Dear me, how wrong of them! Come round here, my little chap. There—there, it is down your back."

The boy ran off. In an instant another entered—a bigger boy.

"I say, mister, 'as a little boy just been in 'ere?"

"Yes."

"And did 'e buy a 'alfpenny buster?"

"Yes."

"And did 'e arse you to shove it down 'is back, as us big fellows would take it?"

"Yes."

"Yah! Where's your watch and chain? 'E's got 'em. 'E's just round the corner."

Out rushed the baker. In a trice the big boy collared the till and bolted.

The shopman never saw the comic side of the transaction at all.—London Strand Magazine.

New York.

New York is the most wonderful city in the western hemisphere. It has the tallest office buildings in the world; it has the greatest bridges on the North American continent; it has more hotels than any other city in the world; its Stock Exchange is the greatest in existence; it is the world's greatest seaport; it has the most magnificent railway stations in America; it is the greatest banking center in the country; more popular songs are published in New York than in all other cities combined; it has more Pittsburgh millionaires than Pittsburgh; it has a larger Irish population than Dublin, a larger Jewish population than Jerusalem had in its most glorious days, and, according to estimates made by some of our most able estimators, it has a larger number of native New Yorkers than Cohoes.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Melancholy.

Melancholy may be defined as a state of mind in which a man is so out of touch with his environment that life has lost its sweetness.—Sir William Osler.

A Medieval Ghost Story

By F. A. MITCHEL.

There is a story concerning one of the De' Medicis, a powerful Florentine family, which, if not true, at least accords well with medieval times. This man—I think he was Cosmo de' Medici, first Duke of Tuscany—was as near satanic as it is possible for a man to be. One of his sons while hunting in a quarrel wounded his brother, and Cosmo killed the offending boy with his own sword. The duke's daughter fell in love, and her father, who claimed the right to dispose of her hand, slew her also. His wife did not long survive these tragedies, and Cosmo gave himself up to so fiendish a career for the rest of his natural life that he shocked even his contemporaries. The above statements are historical. The story is as follows:

There stood in the environs of Florence during the seventeenth century, near the spot where Duke Cosmo killed his son, a villa which in his time had been a hunting lodge. It is well known that the duke's conscience tormented him, and it is supposed that his prodigal life after his wife's death was to drown its voice. The hunting lodge, where it was supposed he was staying when he killed his son, after his demise was for many years unoccupied. The story goes that in the duke's will that clause which referred to the lodge read, "The lodge where I sojourned when I found it necessary to maintain my authority as head of the house of De' Medici by punishing my son I bequeath to the devil."

No one could be found who was willing to buy the place under such a title, and for years after its owner passed away so great was the horror of his memory that no one would rent it. At last, however, an Italian gentleman, Signor Cavalli, bought it for a song and converted it into a villa. He was a young man just married to a young and beautiful wife.

One evening shortly before dinner—it was during the gloaming, before candles were lighted—Signor Cavalli was in the library trying to read in the dusk. Signora was in her room, directly above, making her toilet. Suddenly the husband heard a thump directly over his head as of a body falling on the floor. He ran upstairs, and there lay his wife inanimate before her dresser. He took her up, carried her to a lounge, placed her on it and sprinkled water on her face. Thus revived, she looked at him with an expression of horror.

"What is it, carissima?" he asked. She closed her lids as if to shut out some horrid picture, then opened them and said:

"The duke!"

"What duke?"

"Cosmo, Cosmo and the devil—one or both. The features were those I have seen in portraits of the first Duke of Tuscany, but they were also those of the devil. They looked at me from the mirror."

"Some one must have come upon you to frighten you."

"That awful face did not belong to any human being. It was dead Cosmo turned Lucifer."

The wife clung to her husband during the rest of the evening and passed the night with him in a chamber at the other end of the villa. The next morning she begged him to take her away from the place, and he was obliged to do so, though he returned the same afternoon. He clung to the idea that certain persons, Duke Cosmo's heirs, were interested in getting possession of the property, and he believed they were taking advantage of the clause in the will respecting it to frighten away any one who should buy it, hoping to secure it for a nominal price.

Cavalli slept on the night of his return in the room where his wife had been so terribly frightened. If any one could scare him out of the house he had bought he was welcome to do so. He was indignant at the outrage that had been practiced upon him and placed under his pillow a rapier and a pistol with which to take care of any one attempting to disturb him. He went to sleep with his hand on the pistol.

Nothing unusual occurred during the night. He slept in the room several nights and before going to sleep for the last of them resolved that on the morrow he would go to Florence and endeavor to persuade his wife to return with him. He was awakened at midnight by seeing a light shining through the bed curtains. Pulling them aside, he saw two young persons, a boy and a girl, each holding a candle, walking slowly across the room. In the boy's side was a gaping wound; in the girl's breast was another.

Strangely enough Cavalli did not feel frightened, though he was appalled. But in another moment another figure appeared behind the two, which froze the very marrow in his bones. A man whom he recognized as the same one his wife had described as having seen in her mirror walked behind the two young persons. This little procession passed to the wall, apparently walking into it as persons walking down into water disappear beneath the surface.

As soon as they had gone Signor Cavalli sprang from his bed and, rushing from the room, went down the staircase into the library below, where he spent the remainder of the night piling wood on embers he found on the hearth. In the morning he left the place and rejoined his wife in Florence.

Weymouth Gazette

FRIDAY, JUNE 5, 1914

In our report last week, of the great fire in East Weymouth, at which the Town Hall was burned, we stated that it was originally built in 1883, and rebuilt on its later location in East Weymouth in 1907.

This statement of the date of the original building ought not to have got away with us as the writer has a vivid recollection of one of the most brilliant events ever held at the old Town Hall, built where it was, not because it was a convenient place but because it was the center of the town.

The event to which we allude was the Grand Military and Civic or more generally called the "Pierce Inaugural Ball," in honor of the inauguration of Franklin Pierce as president, on the 4th of March, 1853.

The Town Hall held on that night, the elite of Weymouth and surrounding towns and Lovell Bicknell Esq. was the chief. It was looked for an all night affair but doomed to extend into other days. There came up in the early part of the night, a snow storm; not a driving blizzard, but a still, damp, heavy snow that came fast and when daylight dawned, was to be the horse which attempted to draw a carriage any distance. Many teams became stalled on the road; not a few of the people could not get away and food was supplied them at the building. Among other two young men from East Weymouth had two young ladies from Hingham and succeeded in getting them as far as East Weymouth but it was two days before travel was opened across High street to Hingham. Not having time to look up the records of the building, the Town Hall, we now, from memory, place it in 1851 or 1852.

John Hanley Dead.

John Hanley one of Weymouth's oldest and most respected citizens passed away Tuesday at his home on Grove street East Weymouth. Mr. Hanley was born in 1822 in County Tipperary Ireland, of an ancient and esteemed family. He came to this country at the age of fifteen in 1837, landing in New York. He found employment on the farm of Mr. Tirrell at East Weymouth. Afterward he worked at the shoemaker's trade in that part of the town and during his active life was industrious, hard working and frugal. For the past few years he has retired from active labor. He married at East Weymouth, in May 1852 Margaret, daughter of Henry Cunningham, born November 2 1825 in County Tipperary Ireland, died April 13, 1908, in East Weymouth. He leaves two sons and four daughters, Selectman Henry E. of this place, John J. of Mills, Mrs. M. T. Crocker, Mrs. Annie Slattery, Miss Josie Hanley of East Weymouth and Mrs. Daniel Hickey of Hingham. The funeral took place from the Church of the Immaculate Conception yesterday morning and was attended by many of the friends of the deceased. Rev. Fr. James Allison celebrated Mass. The music was under the direction of the organist, Miss Nellie Noonan. There were many beautiful floral tributes. The bearers were six nephews of the deceased, Frank Hanley of Brockton, Thomas Magner, Daniel Magner, John Magner and John Cain of Hingham and John W. Hanley of East Weymouth. Interment was in the family lot at St. Francis Xavier cemetery.

Plans Maturing For Garden Fete

At the home of Mrs. Robert S. Hoffman in East Weymouth, last Monday afternoon a most enthusiastic meeting of the officers of the Kings Daughter's Union and the committees from the several circles in the Union in charge of the annual Garden Fete scheduled for June 24, was held with a large number present. The Fete is to be held on the Hoffman estate and the proceeds are for the King's Daughter's and Sons home for the aged, called Pond Home. Elaborate plans for amusement features and for satisfying the "inner man" were reported and discussed at length, and the Fete of 1914 should be the most successful of any yet held.

A pageant with 150 children taking part will be a feature. This will be directed and arranged by Miss Zella Hall, Mrs. R. S. Hoffman, Miss Inez Wheaton and Miss Marguerite Connors. A fine entertainment is being arranged for the afternoon in the spacious barn and in the evening a first class vaudeville show will be presented.

Events of interest to the children will be athletic sports with prizes, an animal exhibit and boat trips about the pond.

The grounds will be magnificently decorated and the booths and tables in charge of the several circles will be trimmed with many new and decidedly novel ideas. The booths and tables will be in charge of the different circles about town plans of which will be announced at a later date.

The ladies in charge of the affair are laboring unceasingly for success and if Mr. Weatherman behaves on Wednesday June 24, they should reap the reward of having an extra large crowd present both afternoon and evening.

CARD OF THANKS.

To all who were so kind to us in our time of trouble, for the many handsome floral tributes and the many kind words of sympathy for the loss of a dear husband and father, we extend our heartfelt thanks.

Paint?

There are two good reasons for painting often enough or even too often. One, to look prosperous; two, to be so.

Nothing does one more credit or gives one more credit than paint, supplemented of course by what goes with it; and paint costs nothing.

True, the first cost is $5 or $6 a gallon put on; but it saves more than that in the property; saves it from slow going down—not always slow—it drops with a jump when water gets in on wood and iron. Dry wood and iron cost nothing, kept dry by paint.

Better paint when it needs it. Paint never goes down in the sense of being more profitable next year.

A very pretty home wedding took place Thursday evening, June 4th, at eight o'clock at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Nash of 101 Putnam street, Quincy, formerly of Weymouth, when their daughter, Alice Mae, was married to Mr. Walter Aver Clarke of Weymouth, formerly of Baltimore, Md.

At the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march rendered by Miss Elfrida V. Callister, a Normal Art school class mate of the bride, of Arlington, the bride appeared on the arm of her father preceded by her young niece, Miss Marion Walsh of Quincy who strewed flowers in their path followed by her brother Francis Walsh, who acted as page.

The bride was attended by Miss Atossa Louise Burrell of Bridgewater as bridesmaid and the groom was attended by the bride's brother, Charles K. Nash as best man. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Melvin S. Nash of Hanover, the double ring service being used. The ceremony was performed under a bower of white and green and the same color scheme was carried throughout the rooms.

The bride wore a beautiful creation of white crepe meteor trimmed with silk shadow applique lace, tulle veil caught with orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and brides' roses, the only ornament worn was a platinum brooch set with pearls and diamonds, the gift of the groom. The bridesmaid was gowned in a dainty pink hand embroidered voile over white messaline and carried a bouquet of pink sweet peas. The flower girl and page were dressed in dainty white.

After the ceremony a reception was held Mr. and Mrs. Clarke, the best man, bridesmaid and Mr. and Mrs. Nash, parents of bride, receiving. The ushers were Frank H. Walsh of Quincy, brother-in-law of the bride, Walter Burns of Providence, R. I. and Charles E. Leavitt of Weymouth, the latter two classmates of Mr. Clarke at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Refreshments of punch, ices and dainty cakes were served by Mrs. Frank Walsh, Mrs. Leonard Hollis and Miss Callister.

The bride presented to the bridesmaid a crescent of pearls and the groom gave to the best man a diamond scarf pin and to the ushers, amethyst scarf pins.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarke left amid showers of confetti and good wishes for a wedding trip and on their return will reside at 37 Bigelow street, Quincy where they will be at home to their friends after September 1.

Mrs. Sarah J. Thayer, Dead.

After but a brief illness Mrs. Sarah J. (Brooks) Thayer, widow of the late Frank D. Thayer passed away at her home in Braintree on Friday, last, aged 66 years.

For many years after their marriage the home of Mr. and Thayer was in East Weymouth but on retiring from business a few years before his death, Mr. Thayer built himself a beautiful home in Braintree and there both he and the wife passed away leaving one daughter, Jennie, wife of Ed. Haskell.

Funeral services were held at the home in Braintree on Monday and the burial was at the North Weymouth cemetery.

THINK OF IT.

30,000 Persons Publicly Recommend Our Remedy. Some Are Weymouth People.

Over one hundred thousand have recommended Doan's Kidney Pills. For backache, kidney, urinary ills. Thirty thousand signed testimonials are appearing now in public print. Some of them are Weymouth people. Some are published in Weymouth. No other remedy shows such proof.

Follow this Weymouth man's example. B. W. Hewitt, 191 Washington street, Weymouth, Mass., says: "I had kidney trouble. I had backache and was annoyed by too frequent passages of the kidney secretions. I could not straighten up. I had heard about Doan's Kidney Pills, so I used two boxes. They removed the trouble. The statement I gave some time ago, praising Doan's Kidney Pills, holds good."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, Sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take, no other.

Baseball Notes.

The 1914 season at the C. M. A. opens to-morrow, when the Chelsea Y. M. C. A. nine lines up against the C. M. A. boys. The Clapp team is composed of all Weymouth boys and should have the support of Weymouth fans from the start.

Weymouth High went to Quincy last Monday to play Quincy High a return game, but the showers made a game impossible.

The game between the Deweys and T. F. Mulligan's Old Timers held at Garfield Park last Saturday afternoon was not very interesting, as not half of the Old Timers put in an appearance. Only a few innings were played and no accurate score was left.

Weymouth High is scheduled to play Winthrop High at the C. M. A. this afternoon at 3:30. Next week on Monday Somerville comes to East Weymouth and on the tenth, Wednesday, Medford will be played at Medford.

Callahan and Fraher, the crack High School battery should attract a large crowd to the C. M. A. while they are doing the heavy work for the Clapp nine.

Who says our local railroad boys can't play ball? East Weymouth trimmed the Quincy carbarmites 16 to 2 at Quincy last Thursday. Jones and Connell were in the points for the East Weymouth boys. Mr. Howley, of Panama, as well as umpirical fame, handled the indicator.

Hingham H. S. succumbed to the onward march of Weymouth High on the C. M. A. last Friday afternoon. It was the second victory for Weymouth over Hingham. The visitors proved much easier than was anticipated, W. H. S. winning 14 to 6 in a farical game. Langford's pitching was the feature. The score by innings:

Innings	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
W. H. S.	6	0	2	0	4	0	1	1	14
H. H. S.	2	0	0	2	0	2	0	0	6

Batteries—Langford and E. Condrick; Wallace and Fee.

YARRINGTON'S PLOT

Thieving Cattle Rustler Checkmated by a Girl

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Ben Yarrington placed his thumbs on the edge of the table and rose to his tall height. His little brown eyes bored deeply into the frank upturned gaze of his stepdaughter, Sadie.

"Girl," said Ben slowly, his sandy mustache working grotesquely with every movement of his lean jaws; "girl, you can do as I say and give Mason the right about tonight or you can find another home."

"Why?" uttered Sadie.

"Because—because I won't have him coming here friendly and mealy-mouthed a-courtin' you when the coyote is changing brands on my cattle and adding to his own herd! That's why! It's war to the knife between Dick Mason and me, and if you don't give him the right about I will!"

Sadie laughed softly. "You can fight your own battles with Dick Mason," she said. "I shall not be your cat's paw in the matter! As for branding your cattle and stealing them for his own range, why, the man who is doing it is eating supper down in your own bunkhouse!"

"Name the man!" Yarrington taunted.

"Your foreman, Red Brady!"

"Thanks for the compliment, Miss Sadie!" broke in a bitter voice from the doorway. "I always knew you had a high opinion of yours truly!"

The girl and the man turned slowly and looked into the savage features of Red Brady. And a most unpleasant sight he presented at the moment, for his plain freckled face was distorted with rage and his wide mouth smiled evilly while his little red-brown eyes held a murderous flame.

"Listeners never hear good of themselves, Red," said Ben.

"I just happened along and I'm glad I heard what I did, Yarrington! It's bad enough to lose our critters to that mean skunk that calls himself Dick Mason without my getting blamed for it! What would I get out of it, hey?"

"You might satisfy your grudge against Mr. Mason," retorted Sadie.

"Grudge, hey?" Red Brady attempted a scornful laugh, but it ended flatly.

"I ain't got no grudge against any man that lives on the square! But when a feller comes down into Fox county and calls himself a cattle raiser and does all his raisin' by rustlin' other folks' critters! We've lost seven strays this week, and I can swear that they're on Mason's range with his brand on 'em!"

"Perhaps you put them there yourself! In that case your information would be perfectly correct," was Sadie's spirited rejoinder.

Red Brady laughed shortly and noisily, vanished from the room.

Up in her own little whitewashed chamber she paused for a moment with her slim brown hand pressed over her eyes. In that brief space of time she relived the years since her mother, a frail widow, with a ten-year-old daughter, had come into this genial climate to keep house for a brother, the owner of a large cattle ranch.

The brother had died, and his property had fallen to Mrs. Farnham, and Mrs. Farnham's lonesome heart had fallen captive to the handsome, bluff personality of Ben Yarrington. After they were married the two ranches were consolidated, and then, somehow, Sadie's mother had lost title to it, and Yarrington owned it all.

"There is only one thing to do," said Sadie, taking her hands down and facing the difficulty. "I'll pack my things to Sulphur Springs, and I'll get a job at doing housework or something until I know just how to set out to earn my living."

Sadie worked busily all the evening.

She heard a number of men ride into the yard and heard her stepfather's voice and knew that they had all gone away together. She drew a long breath of relief.

"That will make it easier," she murmured. The moon was high in the heavens when she completed her work. Three great trunks and several bundles were the results of her labors, and she was almost asleep from fatigue, but she brought her mother's favorite chair and added it to the pile.

Half an hour later she was riding out of the yard on her own cream-colored horse, while Ching Loo, the cook, was driving one of the big wagons on which her goods were loaded.

"Ching, we shall meet some of the men coming back," said Sadie dubiously.

"Ah, no, missee," cackled the Chinese. "Me drive like Ole Nick, you call—um, all around by Debbie creek—no can find—no can meet—no wolly!"

"You are so kind, Ching Loo," sobbed the weary girl. "I shall try not to worry, only I am too tired to have any trouble tonight."

"No trouble," assured the confident oriental, and, lashing the lean sorrels into a mad gallop, he turned the wagon into the back trail around by Devil's creek and left Sadie to ride on alone to the town.

If she could only see Dick Mason! But he was away at the county seat and would not return for another week.

As she passed the boundaries of Mason's ranch she heard the sound of hoarse voices in argument.

Was it possible that the men who had come for Yarrington that night had meditated a raid upon Mason's place in search of lost cattle? If that was so, with Red Brady in the plot, they would undoubtedly manufacture proof of Mason's dishonesty and thus empowered would run the young rancher out of the county for good.

With a sharp cry Sadie turned her horse down the line of wire fencing, and when she found a weak spot she put the gallant little mare over it and padded noiselessly across the range until she was behind the black bulk of Mason's bunkhouse.

Slipping from the saddle, she held a gun in each hand and crept quietly around the house, flattening her slim form against the boards, until she reached the deep shadow of a clump of mesquite. Now the scene opened before her like the setting of a stage for a western play.

Cowboys glided to and fro on noiseless feet, and, to Sadie's indignation and surprise, she saw that Mason's cow punchers were apparently on the most friendly terms with Ben Yarrington and his horde of bad men. Her sharp ears heard the gist of their talk. There was to be a hasty gathering of Mason's herds. A few undesirable were to be left behind, and the remainder were to be driven on to Yarrington's ranges and rebranded. There were half a dozen "greasers" among Yarrington's men, who were experts at this work. And, worst of all, Mason's men appeared to be hand in glove with the conspirators and had promised recklessly to swear away their employer's honor if the matter came into court.

Presently two horsemen came riding slowly by and circled to a standstill near her hiding place. She recognized them as two of Dick Mason's most trusted men.

"I'm afraid he didn't get my wire," muttered Dol Vanness hurriedly. "He ought to be here by this time."

"I've staved off them coyotes as long as possible," rejoined Joey Brown disconsolately. "They're jest yapping for to get their horses behind the hull Mason outfit and send it klutzing over on to Yarrington's range. It's all I can do to keep our boys from wiping the hull passel of 'em out here and now!"

"I know it, but we just got to play with 'em till the boss gets here. I want to catch 'em with the goods on—that's enough! Rustle along, there, Joey. They'll suspect we ain't in with 'em!"

The two horsemen circled again and went back to join the others, while Sadie's valiant little heart sang for joy. Now she understood the situation. Mason's men were only pretending to conspire with Yarrington and his companions. In reality they had sent word to Dick Mason and were impatiently waiting his arrival before meting out justice to the cattle thieves.

The score of cowboys waiting impatiently for Yarrington's signal to make a dash for the cattle range were startled by the sudden appearance among them of Sadie Farnham's cream pony, with the girl falling helplessly over the silky mane of the sturdy little beast, and so cleverly and so quietly had Sadie come among them that Cream had reached the side of Dol Vanness' big gray before the startled men realized what had happened.

"What's happened to the gal?" "It's our Sadie, Yarrington!" And other voices took up the chorus of questioning as the girl slipped limply into the arms of Dol Vanness, who had leaped to catch her. As he shouldered her slim form she managed to whisper in his ear:

"It's a fake, Dol! Hold 'em here a little longer. Dick's coming!"

"She's badly off," blurted out Dol excitedly. "Wait a minute, you fellows, till I bring her to. We can't go off and leave her. Yarrington, it's your darter, come here and pour a little of your whisky down her throat!"

Yarrington came forward reluctantly. "What do you mean butting in on my work, eh?" he hissed in Sadie's ear as the fiery liquor caused her to cough and splutter.

"You told me to leave!" murmured Sadie faintly.

"Did you, Yarrington?" demanded Dol fiercely. "Why, every man in Fox county believes that—that"—Dol stopped short. He, too, heard the distant sound of hoofs.

"Yah! Believes what?" demanded Yarrington fiercely.

"Beat it for the house when the gun play opens," hissed Dol in Sadie's ear as he lifted her to her feet and gave her a push toward the little white house among the trees.

"Now, Yarrington, what is it you want to know?" asked Dol, edging toward his horse. He was astride of it in an instant and with a gun in either hand was inviting Ben Yarrington to throw his own weapons on the ground and hold his hands high.

And at the same moment the whole yard seemed unexpectedly full of strange men and a little brilliant gunplay in the beginning was quickly over and every Yarrington man found that he had two men to face—one of Mason's outfit and the other, one of the posse which Dick had hastily gathered with the sheriff as he approached his ranch.

Sadie retreated to the vine wreathed porch and there Dick found her when the excitement was over.

"Dear," he whispered, kneeling beside her, his handsome face close to her own; "Dol has told me about it. Did Yarrington actually turn you out?"

In a few words his sweetheart had revealed the story to Dick Mason and his indignation was unrestrained.

"The best way to settle that coyote is to make him give back your property!" he declared as they watched the discomfited band from Yarrington's ride away toward Sulphur Springs with the posse in command.

"Yes," said Sadie demurely. "And now, Dick, what about me?"

"Why, when I got Dol's message that Yarrington was making me trouble and that I was to get here before morning I calculated that it would mean a bad break between you and that old coyote of a stepfather of yours. And so when I stopped for the sheriff I just dropped word with the sky pilot in Sulphur to happen along here at breakfast time and I'd have a job for him. I wondered what I'd do for a cook; mine lit out yesterday, the boys say. And here comes one, sure enough!" He pointed toward the open gate, through which Ching Loo was carefully guiding the lean sorrels, the big wagon rolled behind, heaped high with Sadie's belongings.

"You sure came to stay, sweetheart," smiled Dick as he went down to welcome the tired Celestial.

Sadie laughed happily as she stood in the sunshine and nodded greeting to Ching Loo, who was making bewildered explanations of his wanderings of the night.

"Go allee samee around Debbill's creek. No can find trail to Sulphur. Velly tired, so come here. Missee allee samee likee come here?" he asked dubiously.

"You did the proper thing, Ching!" assured Dick, slipping a large gold coin into Ching's hand. "Miss Sadie stay here now, all time; and you too. Can cook?"

Ching nodded delightedly. "Can cook." "Can cook wedding breakfast?" persisted Dick.

"Can cook—anything!" cried Ching ardently.

"Then hop into the kitchen and get up the best wedding breakfast you know how. Chop, chop! Sabe? Miss Sadie marry me this morning. She's going to put on her wedding dress now. That's right, Ching; put the trunks in the house."

Couldn't Remember His Star. As illustrative of the fits of abstraction to which some men are subject in an extraordinary degree, Sir Henry Irving was fond of relating a story of his former manager, Charles Dillon.

Some years after "The Bells" had made Irving famous he chanced to meet Dillon and was outspoken in his delight.

Dillon looked him over, finally remarking that he had no recollection of him. Irving reminded him of the tour they had made together and mentioned his name. Dillon thought for awhile, and recognition appearing to dawn upon him, he extended his hand.

"Irving? Oh, yes, I remember the name," he declared reminiscently. "And what are you doing now, Irving?"

Emilie Laroque

By MARGARET C. DEVEREAUX

During the French revolution a young girl who lived in the neighborhood of the conciergerie prison while looking out through a window saw a commotion down the street. Then a fugitive appeared, fleeing for his life, persons getting out of the way before him. Several blocks in his rear gendarmes appeared, evidently following him. In a few moments the man was passing the window. On his face was the wild look of one who knew that if caught he must die. If only he could elude his pursuers! Seeing the girl at the window, he gave her a look of agonized appeal.

"Come in," she said. The girl withdrew from the window, which was but a few feet above the sidewalk, so as to give him egress, and he passed headforemost through the opening and landed, exhausted, on the floor. The girl pulled down the sash and the shade, and both waited with bated breath to know if the fugitive had been seen to enter the house and who would give him away. In a few minutes there were sounds without of persons running. These died away, and there was quiet again.

The man arose and stood on his feet, he and the girl looking upon each other intently. He was about eighteen years of age, and his clothes, though worn, were those of a gentleman. "I am not safe," he said. "They will very shortly realize that they have lost me and will search every house in the neighborhood."

Two other women were coming downstairs—Mme. Laroque and her elder daughter, Louise. Emilie hurriedly told the others what had happened.

"Oh, heavens!" exclaimed her mother. "What have you done? If he is caught here we will all be dragged to the guillotine."

"He will not be caught here," said Emilie. "I'm going to dress him up for a girl."

"Who are you?" asked Mme. Laroque. "The Count de Turinnee. I would rather die than endanger you. I will leave you at once."

"No, you won't," said the plucky Emilie. "Make haste; there's no time to lose."

She pushed him up the staircase, and putting him into a room went to a closet and began to throw women's clothing on to the floor before him. Divesting himself of his coat and waistcoat he threw them into a corner and picking up a dress put it on, Emilie adding what adornment he required. His hair would surely have given him away, but fortunately at that time women wore white caps something like what they now wear while bathing, and the girl, taking off hers, put it on the count's head.

Emilie, after hiding the coat and waistcoat, went to the window and looked out. She saw gendarmes on the opposite side of the street before a house and knew that others were making a search within. The count was right—the neighborhood was being searched.

"There is nothing for you to do but wait," she said to the fugitive, "but there is yet time to make you look more like a girl. His hair was worn long for a man after the custom of that day, and she pulled some of the locks from under the cap, and producing curling irons spent the time frizzing his hair until there came an enormous rap at the door.

"Courage!" she exclaimed, pressing his hand. "On your coolness depends your life."

"The ladies below will betray me," said the count.

"No, they won't; their safety is linked with yours. If you fool your followers no harm will come to us; if not, we will all be in prison within another hour."

When the door was opened the two were ready to descend the staircase. Seeing gendarmes, Emilie looked surprised, and the count endeavored to do so.

"We are looking for an escaped prisoner, the Count de Turinnee. He is concealed in some house in this neighborhood."

"I assure you," moaned Mme. Laroque, "there is no such person here."

"But, mamma," interposed Emilie, "the citizens are welcome to search the house. We, who are advocates of the revolution, have no wish to prevent the police from hunting down the miserable aristocrats wherever they are to be found."

The words and especially the tone in which they were spoken did more to throw the gendarmes off the scent than anything that could have been done. The house was searched, but perfunctorily, and the searchers went away satisfied that these good citizens would not harbor an aristocrat. When they had gone the count sank on one knee before Emilie and, having kissed her hand, said:

"Tonight I will attempt to leave Paris and join the emigres in Belgium. If the kings of France are ever restored I will reward you for what you have done for me. But for you I would now be on my way to the guillotine."

Twenty years later the Count de Turinnee, a middle aged man, drove up to the house in which he had been rescued and called for Emilie Laroque.

"I have come," he said. "What for?"

"To offer you my fortune, myself, anything I have that you will accept."

She took them all.

PHYSICAL COURAGE.

At 2 o'clock in the Morning is the Time to Test It.

It is at 2 o'clock in the morning that man's vitality is at its lowest ebb; all the physical forces are then at their lowest ebb, and every military man of experience knows that the "2 o'clock courage" counts. He knows that if a soldier is really brave at that hour he need never fear of his becoming a coward, as he is really a remarkable man.

A well fed man will fight better than a half starved man, whether he be civilian or soldier. And this is the same principle as the so called "2 o'clock bravery," for the half starved man lacks vitality, just as the average man lacks vitality at 2 o'clock in the morning.

If you are anxious to know just how brave you are make the test some morning at 2, when you hear burglars in your house. If you crawl under the bedclothes you are probably quite a normal man, but if you rise boldly from your bed, grasp the nearest weapon and sally forth to meet the robbers you are indeed a brave man and should be proud of yourself.

Any veteran of some great war will tell you that the most difficult test of courage is to be aroused from his sleep by the shrill blast of bugle and long roll of drums and ordered to charge an enemy unseen or only dimly seen at 2 o'clock in the morning. Marching into battle under the bright sunlight is not so difficult, and the seasoned veteran enjoys the thrill, but even the most hardened veteran feels "creepy" and uneasy turning out at 2 o'clock in the morning to meet the enemy amid the shadows of night, and this is solely because of a natural physical weakness at that hour and has nothing whatever to do with that mental weakness called "cowardice."—New York American.

LIFE ON HOLLAND'S CANALS.

Where Spring Cleaning is the Rule All the Year Round.

I think one may see barges and canal boats in greater variety at Rotterdam than anywhere else. One curious thing to be noticed as they lie at rest in the canals is the absence of men. A woman is always there, her husband only rarely. The only visible captain is the fussy, shrewish little dog which, suspicious of the whole world, patrols the boat from stem to stern and warns you that it is against the law even to look at his property. I hope his bite is not equal to his bark.

Every barge has its name. English suburban villas have not a greater variety of fantastic names than the canal craft of Holland, nor with all our monopoly of the word "home" does the English suburban villa suggest more compact coziness than one catches gleams of through their cabin windows or down their companions.

Spring cleaning goes on here, as in the Dutch houses, all the year round, and the domestic part of the vessels is spotless. Every bulwark has a washing tray that can be fixed or detached in a moment. "It's a fine day, let us kill something," says the Englishman; "Here's an odd moment, let us wash something," says the Dutch vrouw.

In some of the Rotterdam canals the barges are so packed that they lie touching each other, with their burgeses flying all in the same direction, as the vanes of St. Sepulchre's in Holborn cannot do. How they ever get disentangled again and proceed on their free way to their distant homes is a mystery. But in the shipping world incredible things can happen at night.—From "A Wanderer in Holland," by E. V. Lucas.

The Chrysanthemum.

It is believed that the first specimen of the chrysanthemum known to have been grown in England—perhaps in Europe—was reared at the Botanic gardens, Chelsea, in 1764, and the flower's rise into popular favor in the nineteenth century was chiefly due to the good work done by the Stoke Newington Chrysanthemum society. This society held its first exhibition of blossoms in 1846, and served not only as a model for all similar associations, but also as a school of chrysanthemum culture for the whole world.—London Graphic.

Too Talented.

"Where is that barber who used to have the end chair?" asked the customer.

"We had to let him go," replied the boss. "He had too much talent."

"Whaddy ya mean—talent?" asked the customer.

"He got so he illustrated his stories with cuts when he was shaving people," explained the boss.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

One Exception.

"You know," began Lovett, "it is said that 'love levels all things.'"

"Yes," remarked the crusty bachelor, "it may level all things except the lover's head."—Philadelphia Press.

Ninety-three couples on June first
A marriage license seek;
This is the record Boston made
For one day in the week.

June weddings will be plenty sure,
And many a happy bride,
Will look her prettiest with the one
She's chosen, at her side.

June weddings are made memorable
By serving Wedding Cake:
Which gives such satisfaction
When it is Whitcomb's make.

Now Weymouth brides should never fail
To serve departing guests,
With wedding cake that they may dream

Base Ball at Clapp Memorial Association.
Yes! the association will be represented by a fast ball team this season and the reason it will be fast is because the players are all local boys. In previous years the C. M. A. have scoured the surrounding towns for players, some of whom were good and some otherwise, but in nearly every instance recommended as big league stuff, only needing to be discovered by a scout.

Another bad feature about the team in the past was that the public never felt sure just who would be playing until the team came on the field. This will not be the case with the team this season. Another advantage the team will have this summer will be the chance to practice together during the week.

Weymouth has turned out some great ball players in the past and the C. M. A. management believes there are local boys in town at the present time who will some day figure in the big leagues.

The season will open tomorrow, June 6th with the fast Chelsea Y. M. C. A. team. We want a crowd of rooters this year for as most everyone knows, and those that don't know, may some day, that a little encouragement, when things are breaking bad, helps. Stick up for the home team whether winning or losing. The line-up for the home team will be as follows:

Callahan, p; Fraher, c; E. Bates, 1st; Gorman, 2nd; Gloster, 3rd; Riley, ss; Drinkwater, lf; Torrey, cf; Vender, rf.

Weymouth Board of Trade.

Every member is earnestly requested to be present as it will be an interesting meeting.

The Board placed on the records and sent to the Fire Department of the Town a vote of thanks for their efficient work at the recent fire in East Weymouth.

They also received a communication from the Mayor of Quincy acknowledging thanks extended to the Quincy Fire Department and in reply to the offer to pay any and all expenses said "there is no charge, we only wish we could have done more."

At a meeting of the Selectmen yesterday afternoon, two proposals were received for clearing up the ruins of the Town House dore, both of which were rejected and the work will be done by the town under supervision of the road department and by the road gang.

Baseball Notes.

It is rumored that Leo O'Dowd of South Weymouth may join the Worcester club in the New England League. O'Dowd started the season with Topeka in the Western league, but later came to Syracuse N. Y. to play.

Vance Monroe's no hit, no run game at the C. M. A. last Saturday was certainly some performance. When the former W. H. S. star is in form, he is as good as any of the semi pros in this vicinity.

The game scheduled for last Monday between Somerville H. S. and Weymouth High on the C. M. A. field, was cancelled by Somerville High.

If a game can be arranged between the C. M. A. and the Crescent Lodge I. O. O. F. nine, some rattling good sport should result. The Odd Fellow's may not be in wonderful shape to go nine innings, but there will be plenty of fun spilled when they get going on the diamond.

The Weymouth Stars journeyed to Rockland last Saturday and pinned a defeat on the Hatherly A. A. by the score of 7 to 5.

At Gardfield Park Weymouth, last Saturday the Weymouth troop of Boy Scouts were defeated by the Braintree troop 6 to 5. In the afternoon the Rindge A. A. of Cambridge went down to defeat at the hands of the Tigers of Weymouth 6 to 0.

The Railroad boys essayed to play the High school nine last Tuesday. That was all they did do, "essayed" to play. Manager Paul Mulready's boys had a field day, showing the fans how not to play ball and Mr. Mulready became disgusted early in the game with his crew and refused to continue keeping score, as he couldn't afford to furnish pencils. Needless to say the High school boys won and the score was so large, nobody who attended the game knows for a certainty just what it is. Better luck next time R. R. boys.

"Billy" Griffin the star catcher of the Weymouth A. C. is peeved. William underwent a tonsorial operation on his hair a few days ago and evidently the "Carrigan" cut doesn't suit Bill, as he says he won't catch a ball game with a hair cut like that. Guess Bill must have been asleep while in the barber's chair.

The Medford H. S. lads defeated Weymouth High at Medford on Wednesday 4 to 0. To-day the team is playing Quincy H. S. at Quincy.

The C. M. A. nine will play the Cambridge Y. M. C. A. aggregation on the C. M. A. grounds to-morrow. A week from to-morrow the U. S. S. Rhode Island nine will journey to East Weymouth. The battleship boys will be accompanied by the Rhode Island band and a concert will be given by the sailor lads.

Thayer Academy

A cordial invitation is extended to all the people of Weymouth to attend the exercises of Seniors Day, June 20 at 2 p. m. The speaker will be Rev. Edwin H. Byington of West Roxbury. Rev. M. Oskman Patton will serve as chaplain.

Weymouth Memorial Services.

Wilsey Lodge, I. O. O. F. and Abigail Adams Rebekah Lodge Hold Services in Old South Church, South Weymouth.

The annual memorial services of Wilsey Lodge, I. O. O. F. and Abigail Adams Rebekah Lodge, were held last Sunday afternoon, for the deceased members of the past year, including Joseph Sargent, E. F. Shaw, O. B. Bates, Florence B. Loud, Lucia A. Nash, Ella E. Manter and Lizzie Lee.

The services took place in the Old South church in South Weymouth. The choir, directed by F. E. Loud, sang two selections and Mrs. Frank Loud presided at the organ. "Remember Me, O Mighty One," was sung by Allan Munroe, George Munroe, Ralph Morrison and Vance Monroe. Rev. Henry C. Alvord, pastor of the church, gave the address on the theme, "The Vision of the Invisible." Rev. Mr. Alvord was assisted in the devotional exercises by Rev. W. W. Rose, chaplain of Wilsey Lodge.

The auditorium was profusely decorated with flowers and fern.

Mr. Horace L. Smith Dead.

Mr. Horace L. Smith, a prominent citizen, died suddenly yesterday morning, while riding on a train of the N.Y.N.H. & H.R.R. between Braintree and Quincy. He had been troubled with heart disease for some time, but of late his health had apparently been much improved. It is said that he hurried from his house to the train. He was 72 years old and is survived by his widow, a daughter, Miss Mildred Smith, a teacher in the Weymouth High school, and a brother, Judge Smith of Minneapolis, Minn. He served in the Civil war in the 19th Maine and Massachusetts Infantry, and was a member of Reynolds Post 58 G.A.R. and the Norfolk County G.A.R. association.

Old Colony Gas Co.

The Old Colony Gas Co. reports output for eleven months of the present fiscal year 55,389,000 cubic feet compared with 40,314,000 cubic feet for the same period last year, a gain of 37 per cent.

High School Alumni Reunion.

The annual reunion of the Weymouth High School Alumni association will take place this year on Tuesday evening June 23 in the High School building.

A social gathering will take place at 5 p. m. followed by a business meeting at 6:30 o'clock. The next feature will be a banquet served in room 8 and this will be followed by a concert and dancing. The committee in charge of the affair consists of Alfred Sheehy, Miss May Chessman, C. H. Chubbuck Jr., John A. McFaun, Fred Garey, Miss Clara Reamy, Miss Olive Nolan, Miss S. Lizzie Fisher, J. H. Walsh and E. R. Sampson. The next meeting of the committee is scheduled for next Monday evening, when further details will be arranged.

Weymouth A. C. 3, Waverly Red Socks 1

At the Weymouth Fair grounds Saturday afternoon, in a close game, the Weymouth A. C. won their fourth consecutive game by defeating the strong Waverly Red Socks of Waverly, 3 to 1. It was somewhat of a pitcher's battle. Buckley, for the visitors, allowed only three hits and struck out fourteen, but he also made three wild pitches which aided in the three runs scored against him, while Callahan allowed five hits and struck out twelve.

The feature of the game was the catch by Abel in deep right field. The score:

Weymouth Board of Trade.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Trade was held at the Clapp Memorial building, Wednesday evening, and was one of the most interesting of the season.

There was a good representation of 175 members and guests sat down to a good supper with Bates & Humphrey, caterers. Divine blessing was invoked by Rev. Edward T. Ford and then followed a discussion of cold meats, salads, strawberries, ice cream, cake and coffee.

At the conclusion of the supper president E. W. Hunt called the meeting to order and proceeded with the business of the evening. As this was the last meeting before the summer vacation the president gave a brief review of the season's work and outlined some work for the future.

Dr. Chase for the committee on insurance supplemented his report of the last meeting by drawing a lesson from the recent fire and spoke of the importance of the towns carrying insurance on its buildings either by insuring in well organized companies or by means of a sinking fund insurance of its own.

John L. Maynard, chairman of the Clean Up committee made a report of progress as to the formation of a permanent Clean Up committee for the town.

The president then introduced the speaker of the evening, W. C. Wakefield Esq., Secretary and General Manager of the New England Board of Trade. Mr. Wakefield is a man of large experience in Boards of Trade and Commercial organizations add gave much valuable information as to ways and means of city and town improvement and upbille. It was by far one of the most profitable talks of the season and Mr. Wakefield received a well merited rousing vote of thanks.

A recess of ten minutes was taken and at 9:15 the meeting started in for new business and the topic introduced was the Fire Department and its immediate needs. The topic was discussed with much enthusiasm until a late hour and the result will be a call for a special Town meeting to place the Town a little farther removed from a calamity like that at East Weymouth last week and the danger which hangs over us of a still greater calamity.

To the Fire Department of Weymouth.

The Selectmen of Weymouth feel that more than a passing notice is due to the Fire Department of the town in recognition of the prompt and faithful service rendered by the engineers and firemen of the department, at the fire in East Weymouth, on the evening of May 27th.

We appreciate the fact that the conditions at this fire were such as the department has never before been called upon to contend with and called for a high degree of courage and efficiency, in which the men were not found lacking. It was clearly demonstrated that our present equipment is entirely inadequate for fighting a fire of any considerable magnitude.

We trust that this fact was made so clear that the town will no longer delay to provide modern apparatus, which will compare favorably in effectiveness with that of our neighbors.

The Board extends its sincere thanks to the officers and men of our home department and to those of the city of Quincy and the towns of Hingham and Hull who so promptly and efficiently came to our relief without expectation of other reward than the consciousness of having helped a neighboring town in its time of need.

By order of the Selectmen of Weymouth, Bradford Hawes, Secretary.

Ladies' Auxiliary to King Cove B. C.

The Ladies' Auxiliary to the King Cove Boat club of North Weymouth, held an all day sewing circle in the club house last Tuesday. Work on two comforters was completed. A delicious covered dish dinner was enjoyed at noon. The auxiliary is planning for a sale to be held the last of June or the first of July. The next meeting will be held this (Friday) evening at the clubhouse.

Garden Fete.

The several circles of King's Daughters in charge of the annual Garden Fete coming on June 24 at the Hoffman estate, East Weymouth, report progress in arranging for the many features. The pageant of 150 children is nearly complete and a children's coaching parade is to be an added feature. The circles in charge of the "commissary department" are preparing to feed a larger number than ever before.

PLAN FOR DISTRICT NURSE SYSTEM

Enthusiastic Meeting of Ladies in M. E. Church East Weymouth last Friday.

In the interests of formulating plans for the establishing of a district nurse system in Weymouth, a meeting of women was held in the M. E. Church East Weymouth last Friday afternoon. The meeting was presided over by Trs. Harriett Voorhees. Addresses were given by Miss Mary Lyons of Quincy and Mrs. Willard Dow of Braintree.

Mrs. Dow described, in an interesting and enthusiastic manner, the growth and development of the district nurse movement in Braintree. She told of many cases of illness and poverty, and of skillful and intelligent handling by the nurse.

The district nurse has been a great success from the first, and now after several years of work, the outlook for the next year was most encouraging. Miss Lyon told of her work. The two nurses employed by the association in Quincy made 3,442 visits last year. 949 of these were made on policy holders of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., this company paying 50 cents for each visit, into the treasury of the nurse's association. The nurses work directly under the physicians. Every day during the year the nurses visit the sick poor, teaching the best methods of caring for the sick, and helping the less fortunate to higher standards of living. They are called, not only into the homes of the poor, but those in better circumstances who need a trained nurse for only a short time each day. The Women voted unanimously to form an association in Weymouth.

There will be a meeting in Clapp Memorial hall Monday evening, June 15, at 7:30, to organize a district nurse association for Weymouth. Mrs. Merchant's orchestra will provide music and there will be speaking by persons who have much experience in work of this kind. It is earnestly hoped that all benevolently inclined residents of Weymouth will attend this meeting and help to bring more comfort to the homes of the sick, in our town.

The following were appointed as a special committee to canvass the town for new members of the association: Mrs. Elbridge Nash, Mrs. William E. Thayer, Mrs. Walter Bernier, Mrs. George Boone, Miss Lillian Curtis, Mrs. Milzar Burrell, Mrs. W. A. Wheaton, Mrs. Edward Hunt, Mrs. E. E. Leonard, Mrs. C. Will Bailey, Mrs. W. E. Ames, Mrs. Harry Tabor, Mrs. Arthur Tirrell, Mrs. Christopher Smetton, Mrs. Wendall Joy, Miss Annie Deane, Mrs. Percy Bicknell, Miss Hannah Barnes and Mrs. Albert Humphrey.

TUFTS LIBRARY

Maps 1816-1820

George H. French has kindly loaned to the library a collection of maps drawn by Phebe, Sally and Elizabeth Humphrey (daughters of Joseph and Rebecca Humphrey) pupils of the Weymouth schools, between the ages of eleven and eighteen years.

The maps of the United States of 1816 are of especial interest, but all of the maps are carefully made, comparing favorably with the work of schoolgirls of to-day, to the credit of the pupils, and also of the teacher of nearly one hundred years ago.

NOTE: The library will be closed on the seventeenth of June. During July and August the usual change in evening hours will be made, see borrower's card. Vacation privileges will be granted as usual.

Firemen's Relief Association.

The Firemen's Relief association of Weymouth will observe next Sunday as Memorial Day with the following order of exercises:

The graves of departed firemen other than those buried in Ward 1 will be decorated by detail early in the morning and at 9 a. m. members will assemble at the Engine house in that Ward.

A line of march will be taken up and the resting place of those in the Ward will be decorated, when the column will proceed to the Old North church where the pastor, Rev. E. J. Yaeger will preach a Memorial sermon and special music will be given by the choir.

Special car service for the accommodation of members will be as follows: Cars leave barn in East Weymouth for Columbian square via Pleasant street at 7:30; leave Columbian square at 7:50; Nash's Corner, 7:55; Lincoln square 8:10; Jackson square 8:30; arrive at Thomas' Corner 9 o'clock.

Flowers for decoration may be left at any of the Engines houses Saturday night. Those intended for special graves should be distinctly labelled.

Sunday at Town Home.

Under the auspices of Reynolds Relief Corps, which was assisted by other patriotic organizations, Sunday was made a specially interesting day to the occupants of the Town Home.

Religious and patriotic services were held in the afternoon. Mrs. Margaret Culley of the Relief Corps was in charge of the exercises, which consisted of devotional exercises and an address by Rev. Charles Clark of Pilgrim church, North Weymouth.

The assembly made a good chorus choir and sang familiar hymns, also the Star Spangled Banner and America, with Mrs. A. L. Flint at the organ. Leonard W. Calu, Waldo Turner and Oliver Burrell, of Reynolds Post, gave interesting talks along patriotic lines.

A feature of special interest came by way of Mrs. Agnes Baldwin, president of the Relief Corps, who in behalf of the Corps, presented to the Home a regulation size silk flag mounted on a staff. Miss Hilda Tomlinson, a niece of Superintendent Eldridge, accepted the flag for the Home in brief remarks embodying the thanks of the management of the Home and the town.

The exercises were a little out of the usual but none the less interesting to those who, in the nature of things, come but little in touch with the outside world.

McDonald-Donahoe

The marriage of Joseph W. McDonald and Miss Rose E. Donahoe was solemnized at the Gate of Heaven church South Boston by the pastor Rev. Fr. Johnson on Wednesday morning at 7 a. m. with a nuptial mass.

A reception followed at the home of the brides parents Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Donahoe 338 K. street South Boston to relatives only, except Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Fitzsimmons and P. J. Fennell with whom Mr. McDonald has made his home since he came to East Weymouth. After a wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. McDonald will be at home to friends at 398 Broad street East Weymouth.

C. M. A. Wins Opener 4 to 0.

The Clapp Memorial nine opened its 1914 season last Saturday by defeating the Chelsea Y. M. C. A. nine 4 to 0 on the C. M. A. field. Vance Monroe was in the box for the C. M. A. boys and shut the Chelsea boys out without a hit or a run. He received good support from his teammates, Gorman, Fraher and Vender starring for the winners and Jones and Burke for the losers. A chorus choir sang, with Mrs. Emma Sanderson soloist and Herbert Hayden organist. Miss Dora Peterson played the piano. Concerted exercises were given by the primary and infant departments. A sermon on the subject "Children's Day" was delivered by Rev. Charles Clark, who conducted a service on baptism on a class of nine children. There were musical selections by Ella Rosendale, Evelyn Nadell, Priscilla Alden, Eleanor Gould, a concerted exercise by Miss Anna Alden, a class and recitations by Edith McClellan, Eva Spiney, Sadie McClellan, Esther Walker, Roland Seabury, Alexander McPhail and Lorine Page.

CLEANINGS ON BEACON HILL

Walsh's Reorganization Plans
Are Shelved For the Present

RAILROAD QUESTION IS FIRST

Its Disposition Will Result in Speedy Adjournment of Legislature—Long Discussion Over Essential Features Is Probable—Fall Political Campaign to Be Fought in State HouseThe prediction can now be safely made that about all of the extensive reorganization plans of Governor Walsh will go over to the next general court.This does not mean that they are found to have no merit, but that the pressure of legislative business is so great that there is absolutely no time within the next few weeks to deal with matters covering a broad field.The governor outlined a gigantic task. He saw that certain improvements could be made in almost every branch of the public service. But he probably did not see the congested situation that he would get into during the early days of June.There is just one thing now that is keeping the legislature in session. It is the railroad question. Without that we should see plans for prorogation within a week, and almost all matters would be rushed or thrown away.There will be a paid insanity board of three experts. That is the most promising matter out of the proposed reorganization of all the state institutions commissions.There will be reduced salaries and full time requirements for the public service commission and the dock board.Maybe the proposed changes in the state board of health will get by this year.The department of adjutant general has been dealt with by the law which gave the governor the right to appoint Colonel Cole.It is decidedly a debatable matter whether or not the railroad bill in the form proposed by the governor's message is enacted into law.

The Railroad Features

The essential feature of the railroad legislation is the abolition of the Boston Railroad Holding company.
This was created in 1909 as a result of the plan suggested by the late Governor Draper for bringing the Billard majority holdings of Boston and Maine stock.The stock of the Boston Railroad Holding company never was salable.
It was all acquired by the New Haven, who thus controls the holding company that controls the Boston and Maine.The adjustment plan proposed by agreement between the New Haven and the department of justice is that the five liquidators shall acquire by act of the legislature the stock of the holding company and the stock of the Boston and Maine.Robert Washburn proposed that they shall acquire merely the stock of the holding company and thus take the place now occupied by the New Haven.This point involves the right of the commonwealth to acquire the stock of the Boston and Maine. Under the adjustment plan those rights are to be ultimately lost, otherwise it would be impossible for the liquidators ever to give a clear title under a decree of the United States court. Under the Washburn plan the sale would be made subject to the same rights that the commonwealth now has of buying and having the price fixed in court.Now the controversy which opened up Monday with the appearance of President Elliott of the New Haven before the railroad committee centres about these few essentials.The governor says that failure on the part of the legislature to proceed along the plan of adjustment will bring about a financial tangle for which the legislature will be responsible.But the signs are growing plain that there is to be a strong movement counter to the adjustment plan, and it is just this other movement that promises to make the present legislative session a pretty long one.

No Vacation?

Governor Walsh says that he is determined to have some vacation before he starts his campaign for next year. He has indeed worked very hard and is entitled to it. But the booming of the first guns is already being heard from political gatherings.
And a July session of the legislature means that the fall campaign will presently be fought out up there.The governor and his friends are pretty confident that he can be re-elected and they expect that the Republicans will be tied up in hard knots over the campaigns of ex-Representative Samuel W. McCall and Charles S. Piro. As things go it looks as if that expectation were to be justified.All along down the line preparations are being made for the fall elections. The campaign will start early and it will be a sharp one.

On the Board Walk

It looked rather good and homelike a few days ago to see Senator Walter McLane and Representative TomWhite strolling along arm in arm on the board walk at Atlantic City.The two men are rather good friends, and they just disappeared over Sunday to recuperate for the last few strenuous days of the session.White is no longer nursing his speakership boom. Instead he learns that Fred Hilton will probably not care to go back to the senate this year and he feels that it is Newton's turn to take the place for a little while.White ought to make a valuable man in the senate. He has had several years of hard experience as chairman of the house committee on ways and means and is a very level-headed legislator. McLane is not a worrier. He probably can be re-elected to the senate as many times as he chooses. And he has already announced that he chooses to come back for at least one more term.

Taxation on Rampage

The committee on taxation has been accused of going on a regular rampage during the last few days of its business meetings. Three bills are sailing along in the house under the guidance of the majority members of the committee that send cold chills down the backs of those who are having troubles with the tax situation.One is the compulsory return bill.
Another is the deceased estates bill.
A third is the valuation bill.Under the first bill a man who does not file a true list of his property over $2000 may be penalized from $10 to $5000 for each offense in addition to the penalties already provided.By the terms of the second bill whenever the tax commissioner finds that an estate has more property in it than has been assessed he has the right to multiply the estate by three, levy the prevailing tax upon that and deduct the sums that have been paid in taxes.Under the third bill the tax commissioner is given the right to revalue the assessment placed upon the property of any person.

Other Tax Bills

There is a fair sized dissenting vote to these three committee reports which as this time are being severely criticized.Under the present taxation system they are very likely the three most oppressive laws that could be reported.The constitutional amendment allowing a low tax rate on intangible securities showed its strength in the senate, but it is being hard fought in the house, where substitute amendments providing for the imposition of the income tax are prepared.The bill providing for a two-year period instead of a one-year period within which collectors may make tax sales is a law.

Burbank Court Bill

The senate committee on rules has not looked with friendly eye upon the judicature commission resolve asked for by Senator Burbank, who wants the rules suspended for its admission.It is a little too bad that the resolve was not presented at the first of the year when the discussion was ripe upon the matter of procedure. Then Sherman Whipple and ex-President Taft were engaged in a sort of lengthy debate as to what reforms ought to be had to make justice more just.But pressure of other things has put that aside just now and it is hard to get consideration for the Burbank measure. The senator himself, however, feels that an investigation by a commission to be appointed by the governor and a report made either next year or the year after would have a most beneficial effect in leading to court reform legislation.

Lomasney's Personal Side

Most people do not know much about the personal side of Martin Lomasney. He is probably the most cartooned man in the municipal politics of any American city, and yet few cartoons do more than express the public situation in the midst of which the ward 8 leader happens to be a central figure.If somebody should show that he was sentimental there would be a shriek. And yet he is sentimental.
Many people do know that he is charitable, and yet he cannot be accused of being liberal.The new discovery is that Lomasney is a judge of fine horses and is more fond of driving horses than of any out of doors pastime. While other men prominent in public life have bought touring cars Lomasney has his horse and buggy. He is as sharp on a horse trade as he is on a real estate deal and his judgment is often appealed to on one as well as on the other.

Corrupt Practices

Now that everybody seems to be in favor of a new bill to stop corrupt practices it is discovered that hardly any two people agree upon just what should be in the bill.That has been the history with most of the corrupt practices bills. About all of the corrupt practices law is faulty and little of it is effective in the sense that it shows the voter just how political finances are being carried on.Today, however, the practice is uniform of filing election reports.
Formerly only the wisest politicians did it. The reformers seldom did so.
The novices who are a kind of reformer never did so. Today the most accurate reports of collections and expenditures are probably filed by the wisest politicians. The most inaccurate are filed by the others.It is pretty late in the session for a new bill on corrupt practices when one considers how drastic a law might be passed and how hard it would be to make it workable. But within a short time a drastic bill is promised.

MONEY AND A MAID

And a Financial Deal That Had a Curious Climax.

AN EXPERIMENT IN SAVING.

It Looked as Though the Plan Proposed by Papa Was Doomed to Failure, but the Little Lassie Had a Big Surprise For Her Fond Parent.It is not necessary to mention her name, but it is of interest to note that she is the daughter of one of "the first families of Virginia," and one characteristic of these same first families is apt to be an utter carelessness of that which pays for your daily bread and mine and which keeps us all out of the poorhouse—money.She was just rising eleven, this little maid, two years ago when her father first noted her lack of interest in things financial. Starting as a barefoot boy because of the prodigality of his progenitors, he had drifted north, worked for a scant living at whatever he could get to do, developed an ability, studied, worked and climbed until at last he found himself a success and was able to spend about $10,000 a year for the maintenance of himself and the wife and child he had accumulated. Then said the wise papa to himself, remembering his days of poverty and stress,
"I must teach her to save."He tried several plans, all of which failed to have any good effect. Just a year ago he hit upon a scheme which seemed to have merit."Here, Boots," he said, "I want to make a proposition to you. This is what I propose: I will give you a brand new dollar bill every Saturday night, and I will write the date upon each one. At the end of the year I want you to show me how many of those actual dollar bills you have, and for every one you can show me I will give you two. Do you think you can make money that way?"The child thought she could and repeated the conditions as well as her mind grasped them, but her father thought she did not get them accurately."Wait," he said; "I'll write it out so that there cannot be any error."

So he wrote:

"I will give you a new one dollar bill every Saturday night. I will write the date on each one as I give it to you. For every such bill that you can show me at the end of the year I will give you two others." Then he signed it.There was a dearth of childish funds for awhile in that household and not a few efforts on the part of the daughter to extort money from her mother, who was wise and refused accommodation. But some way, it did not then transpire how, the little girl dug herself out of penury and into comparative affluence and that without meaning to exercise guile. She seemed to have money in her purse and was quite able to hold up her end at the soda fountain or wherever else her little friends gathered, and her parents, who said nothing at all about it to her, wondered and speculated, finally agreeing that Boots was spending at least a large part of her allowance.The dollar bill came every week, duly inscribed with the date of the gift, and was accepted by the little maiden with appropriate thanks. Then came the Christmas holidays, and the parents wondered if she would save her money or remember them. She remembered them, but not with much expenditure. Then came the last of the fiscal year, and the father inscribed another note and turned it over to her."Now, Boots," he said, "I have given you fifty-two of these, and I promised you two for every one you could show me at the end of the year. How many have you?""I'll get them for you," said the innocent child and ran away.The old folks had a laugh between themselves while she was gone, thinking that she would exhibit two or three bills and fully believing that the experiment had failed. Then in came the daughter. She laid a sheaf of bills down before her father.He counted them—fifty-two! All unused and bearing his indorsement of the date of gift. Among them was the agreement written by her father."Now, how much do you owe me?"
she asked."I reckon I owe you $104," he said,
"but I cannot see how you managed to save every one of these bills and yet had all the money you have spent.""Well, pop," she answered, "it's this way. I told Joe one time that I couldn't spend any money, although I had it, and he asked me why. I told him and showed him what you had written. Then he made me what you call a proposition."He has an allowance of $2 a week.
He said he would give me 70 cents a week if I would keep all the bills and give them to him at the end of the year after showing them to you. It's a perfectly fair agreement. I have had my 70 cents a week, I show the bills, you give me $104 and I turn over to him the $52. He makes $15.00, and I make $104. And I don't have to be poor or broke."Now, what would you do with a child like that?—Detroit Free Press.Let those who would affect singularity with success first determine to be very virtuous, and they will be sure to be very singular.—Walter Colton.

ON THE FARM

Read this column and you can have it delivered at your house with something new every week for a full year by sending $2.00 to this office now.

Some people think that the dry cow needs no care, but those that make the best records have the best care during their period of rest.

Every year vegetable crops are much injured by being sown too thickly and perhaps it is hardly too much to affirm that most gardeners would be the gainers were only half the seed sown that there is now.

Corn, being a cultivated or hoed crop, serves well to clean the land—that is free it from weeds, so fitting it for grain growing and putting it into shape to seed down to grass or hay.

A higher standard of living is possible to the man in the country. He can build a house for the price of two or three years' rent in the city. He can have fresh vegetables and fresh meat and fresh eggs on the farm that make the canned and cold storage products of the city a disagreeable memory.

It is very important to start right and begin the flock with birds which are free from contagion and parasites, and to put such birds upon ground which is likewise free from these causes of disease.

In autumn cut off the current twigs of the growth of the year and stick them down in any protected place. They will become rooted and may be transplanted in the next spring, or later. Is there is any better breakfast relish, and any more healthful dish than that of currants and cream.

If properly cared for, ducklings are easily raised, and should be full grown at twelve weeks. Their care differs from that of chickens, and the first principles of duck culture should be learned before the hatch is due. If brooders are used, be careful not to over heat them. Also keep brooders very clean with fresh straw in plenty—they must have dry sleeping quarters.

There are many signs that this is to be a great agricultural year, and there is nothing that can check a trade revival that has as its basis $10,000,000,000 of new wealth dug out of the earth in a single season. That is the prospect that lies before the business men of the country.—Agricultural Report.

Secretary Houston is justified in saying that our farming has not yet got entirely beyond the pioneer stage, but it does not follow that the farmers have been foolish or unenterprising, or that they are failing to adapt themselves to changing conditions. As the entire country passes beyond the pioneer stage, farming goes along with it.

The reason why trenching improves plants is that it breaks up the hard sub-soil and supplies good feeding soil below. At the bottom of the trench should be placed strong manure, this covered with good soil, and layer after layer built up soil and manure till the trench is full. Try a row of blackberries in soil of this kind and you will find they will yield in a manner to astonish you.

Every good man loves his horses, and every horse owner will bet that his horses can pull more and run faster than any other horses in the neighborhood. It is good to think that way, yet it is poor sense to put the belief into effect. Because you have some good and willing horses is no reason why you should ask them to over-exert themselves in work. A horse will stand up under a lot of sane use, but will quickly go down under senseless abuse.

The books, magazines and trade publications which the farmer and his wife have today in abundance and read carefully are all good. They are all great aids in better farming and the making of better farm home conditions. They are the right kind of reading matter in the hands of the right kind of people at the right time and in the right place. They are an important part of the farm and farm home running equipment. They are also a means of extensive general education and pleasant diversion from actual duties and hard work.

What is most needed in the care of work animals is to make their work as regular as possible. The horse is a muscular animal, and upon the strength of his muscles depends his efficiency. The way to keep the flesh round and the muscles hard and strong is to give the horses feed for energy and muscle-building, and to give them some exercise in the form of work as nearly as possible every day of the year, with no day's work too long. During the busy seasons, when ground must be plowed and crops planted, the farmer goes to the fields early in the morning, works hard all day, and remains in the field till late in the evening. Ten hours' work is enough in one day for the team or the man who drives it.

Her Investigation

By MARTHA V. MONROE

John Ackerman had proposed to Helen Markley and was accepted on condition. Helen was a practical, far-seeing girl. She resolved before their engagement was published to the world—indeed, before it was suspected—to inquire about him.

She had the frankness to tell him what she was going to do. He said that he would be willing to have her take that and any other precaution she thought proper and was quite willing to wait for his answer until she had satisfied herself in the matter.

One thing Ackerman insisted on which his fiancée balked at. He wished to hear the reports she got of him and who made them. Miss Markley didn't think this would be honorable in her. Ackerman replied that there could surely be no harm in her telling him who had spoken well of him, and it was his right to know who had spoken ill of him. She yielded the point and agreed to tell him all.

The next three months were rather a trying time between the lovers. When Miss Markley heard her lover well spoken of she was very gracious to him. When some one spoke ill of him she could not conceal the effect it had on her. When two of the three months had elapsed she wrote him a note, breaking the engagement between them. He called on her and she refused to receive him.

He wrote her a note stating that he supposed some one had spoken ill of him and reminded her of the agreement that he should hear the good and the bad. She replied that she had decided against him on the testimony of one whose word was unimpeachable, and nothing he could say would serve to eradicate the impression that had been made upon her.

It now seemed to Mr. Ackerman that it was time to depart from the defensive and take up the offensive. He had well understood from the beginning that if his fiancée could get persons to talk about him as they really felt there were plenty who would speak ill of him. The shortest way to neutralize what these persons said was to have a few words spoken by supposed friends of Miss Markley when the time came to use them. He therefore made inquiries about her on the same lines she inquired about him. Since he could not get a word with her he fired a preliminary shot.

He wrote her of his investigations, which he said he did not in the least value, but he had kept a written list of them that he would be pleased to compare with what she had gathered about him. This put a different face on the matter. Miss Markley was not only curious to know what people had said about her, but she did not wish the man she had discarded to be prejudiced against her. She consented to a meeting.

Ackerman called with a little memorandum book in his pocket. Miss Markley received him coldly and asked him to produce his notes.

"First," he said, "is what was told me by Miss A. when I asked her what kind of a person you were."

"She hates me."

"Nevertheless she spoke highly of you. 'Miss Markley,' she said, 'is a lovely girl.'"

"The serpent."

"Now," said Ackerman, "I have given you one criticism of yourself. I would like to hear one criticism, the one that decided you to drop me. Perhaps I may be content with his name alone."

"Paul Gunter."

"That is quite sufficient. I hold Mr. Gunter's note for $500. He gave it to me in lieu of being criminally prosecuted by me for a proceeding which, to say the least, was irregular."

Ackerman, who spoke these words with a change of manner, arose to go. "Have you the note?" asked Miss Markley.

"I have, but it is under lock and key. You are the only person except Mr. Gunter and I who knows that I possess it."

"Where are you going?"

"There is no necessity of going any further in this matter. Thus far there has been no betrayal of confidence, at least by me. I have proved that your plan of getting opinions about the man you would marry is a failure."

"What is a girl to do?" moaned Helen. "When she consents to link her life with a man she takes a step in the dark."

Ackerman had gone to the door and placed his hand upon the knob. He turned and walked back to her.

"It is that step in the dark that leads me to forgive you for what you have done. Marriage, you know, has been truly called a lottery. A lottery for the man as well as the woman. But we must take it or fail to fulfill our natural destiny. Every woman before marriage should, so far as possible, learn what she can about the man she expects to marry, but she can only learn through others of his general standing in the community. What he is in his inner self she cannot learn from others. Politic persons will speak well even of an enemy; prejudiced persons will find it difficult not to malign those against whom they are prejudiced."

The next day the engagement between Mr. Ackerman and Miss Markley was announced. Every one who congratulated either of them spoke well of the other.

THE GOLD TEST.

Its Use In Diagnosing Diseases of the Brain and Nerves.

Like the weird remedies and tests of medicine in the middle ages are some of the latest means science has devised to detect and classify forms of insanity and brain affections. Salts of gold in solution, drops of spinal fluid, bits of the tissue from the covering of a normal person's brain and various other similar materials are the means employed.

The gold test, for instance, is used to prove definitely the existence of paresis, meningitis and several other forms of nervous diseases, though in practice it is used mostly as corroborative proof rather than the only proof. Solutions of salt of gold of carefully graduated strength are put into test tubes, with the weakest solutions at one end of the row grading up to the strongest at the other end.

Fluid from the spinal column of the person who is being examined is then dropped into the tubes. The presence of certain kinds of brain or nervous trouble is then indicated by the colors produced in some of the tubes. The particular color produced and the strength of the solution that shows the color strongest give the clew to the kind of disease.

Another peculiar test for certain other kinds of brain trouble is to take a drop of blood from the person examined and place in it a prepared solution from a tiny particle of brain covering of a normal person. Epilepsy causes an easily detected reaction on the combined solution, while other brain disturbances are detected by a similar process, using other materials in the same way.—Saturday Evening Post.

Being Lucid.

If you wish to achieve a reputation for originality and distinction try being lucid. There is nothing quite like it. "Permit me to thank you for your lucid exposition of"—it matters not what the subject.

What is it to be lucid? It is to write something which the man who compliments you because you have been lucid at it agrees with. No one who disagrees with you ever called you lucid. No woman ever referred to her husband as a lucid husband. No man ever called his wife a lucid wife.—Life.

The Gazette & Transcript is printed and mailed Friday afternoons, and is for sale at all News-stands in the Weymouths and at the South Terminal, Boston.

All communications must be accompanied with the name of the writer, and unpublished communications cannot be returned by mail unless stamps are enclosed.

Notices of local entertainments to which admission fee is charged must be paid for at regular rates, 10 cents per line in the reading matter, or regular rates in the advertising columns.

In the card of thanks to firemen to be found elsewhere in this issue the Selection tell some truth which ought to have been told at the March meeting but the privilege was denied the applicant. Had the story been told and justice done there would now have been no occasion for the card of thanks.

FLAG DAY.

June 14th is the Nation Wide Flag Day but as that comes on Sunday there seems to be a diversity of opinion as to what day to select for a general observance of the day. In several of the large cities, Friday the 12th, has been selected as it is a school day and the best time to have a school observance of the day.

At a joint meeting of several of the patriotic orders in town the matter was discussed with the resolve to have certain exercises but make a specialty of "Flag at the Peak" on Saturday, Sunday and Monday and ask all persons and organizations in town who have a flag and means of displaying the same to join in a three days' display of "Old Glory."

High School Notes.

The graduation exercises will be held on Thursday, June 18th, in the High School hall.

At a meeting of the senior class the following students were elected ushers for the coming graduation: Juniors, R. W. Bates and D. Marden; sophomores, L. Tisdale and J. Reis; freshmen, G. Langford and W. Whitte.

The Class Historian is Miss Margaret Murphy, the Class Phropets, Miss Ruth Powers and Henry Dwyer.

The following committee from the junior class was appointed to adorn and decorate the hall and stairways: Miss Helen Cuniff, Miss Catherine Galvin, Miss Caroline Corridan, Vincent Gorman, Almon Deane, Anthony Cassese, Frank Vender and Miss Dorothy McCarthy.

A few weeks ago, the junior commercial law class went over to the courthouse in Quincy for an all-day session, to see how commercial cases are run off. Last Wednesday a member of the teacher's corp from Burdett's College addressed the school. Just now the class is wavering between a life of loot and danger and one of business and dollars.

The "W" club is done for! And because there is not enough spirit in the school to float a cobweb. The banquet which was arranged for this week will not be held.

Paint or Not.

Paint was so high the last few years the market was flooded with trash.

What is trash? It looks like paint and pretends to be paint but isn't worth painting. It costs a painter's day's work to put on a gallon of paint, good or bad; and a painter's day's work is $3 or $4.

Add that to the price of a gallon. That is the cost of a gallon. Devoe is $5 or $6 a gallon; and trash a half dollar less.

But Devoe is all paint and more too; you add oil to it; a gallon is 5 or 6 quarts of perfect paint for the painter's pot. But trash is three-quarters, two-thirds or half paint; you pay a half-dollar less for nobody-knows-what-it-is.

10 gallons Devoe is enough for the average job; it takes 15 to 20 gallons of trash. And the wear the same way. Unfortunately, they look alike when first put on.

DEVOE.

Everett Loud, East Weymouth; M. R. Loud & Co., South Weymouth, and A. J. Sidelinger, North Weymouth, sell it.

HOW CAN ONE BE POPULAR AND STILL BE FAIR?

One ever-recurring situation met by the gas man is brought up by the strict manner in which the company must live up to its rule that the discount period on gas bills shall close on a certain date. Consumers, who because of absence from home, sickness, non-receipt of bill, or disputed rates, fail to take advantage of the discount, sometimes may feel that the company's attitude is to rigorous. But when one stops to consider the difference between a private and a public utility company, understanding our position, he will not feel that we are less friendly and less anxious to please him because we are firm on this point. On the contrary, he will respect us for our stand.

It would be far more agreeable to say to a good consumer who has failed to get his discount, "All right, we will let it go this time," than to say, "No, we cannot do it." But it is not a matter of choice: it is a matter of fairness and duty. There is no citizen who would not feel outraged if a few individuals were permitted to pay their taxes without penalty, while others were required to pay the cost of advertising. The officials who displayed this favoritism, would be denounced as unfit for public service.

Our company's officials in their relations to the public, stand in similar position.

Since it is impracticable for a number of companies to pipe the streets and distribute gas, the people—all of them—through their elective officers, have commissioned us to supply them.

In giving us this commission, the public requires us to favor no one—personal friends, rich or poor, prominent or obscure—at the expense of the rest.

If the discount period were extended to some, it would have to be extended for all, and, as there would always be some belated payments, we would end by having no fixed time to close the month's business and make up our monthly reports.

Then there is an extra expense for clerical work, printing and postage on every account not paid by the discount day. When the belated consumer pays the full amount of his bill, he bears the cost of the delay. If he paid the bill less the discount, the cost of the delay would fall on every other consumer.

True, the other consumers might pay no more for gas, but there are many ways in which the losses of a public utility company affect its patrons. If it barely pays expenses and interest, the company cannot give liberal terms and free service, for it has to collect from its consumers every little item. If it earns more, it can afford to be more generous in its dealings.

When we give benefits to consumers, it is our aim to give to all alike, as impartially as if it were chosen by ballot instead of by charter, and to give to all the best of service within our means.

PLACID CHINESE WOMEN.

An Illustration of How Well Their Emotions Are Hidden.

"Chinese women are trained to show no emotion, to appear absolutely placid under all circumstances," says Elizabeth Cooper, author of "My Lady of the Chinese Courtyard." "I saw it illustrated at a reception given to the wife of one of the high Chinese officials. All the women of the foreign official colony were at my home, about forty in number, and the great lady was announced. Every one rose. The room was a very long one, about seventy-five feet, and had a very highly polished floor covered with Persian rugs.

"The Chinese lady came to the doorway, with a servant on each side of her to help her walk upon her tiny bound feet. At the entrance they left her, and she started to come to me; but, being almost helpless upon her 'golden lilies,' she stepped upon a rug, which slid upon the polished floor, and instead of swaying like the bamboo in the breeze as she came to me she sat down suddenly and slid to my feet to the consternation and horror of the assembled guests.

"She was raised to her feet, and, although she must have been covered with confusion and embarrassment thus to make her first entrance into a foreign home, she gave her hand to me without a trace of emotion visible in her face or manner, nor did she apologize. One would think by her appearance that it was the usual mode of entrance into a room."

Married the Day They Met.

Horace Greeley and Mary Young Cheney were married the first day they met. They had corresponded for some time, a common friend who was something of a matchmaker having brought this about. She was all his fancy painted her, but she was much disappointed in his appearance, so much so that when he appeared before her, having proposed and been accepted by letter, she frankly told him that, although she married him, she was not in love with him. Their married life was long and happy, and the loss of his wife was a blow which Greeley did not long survive.

An Expensive Lesson.

"Now, Thomas," said the teacher severely, "how many times must I tell you not to snap your fingers? Put your hand down and presently I'll hear from you."

Five minutes later she said, "Now, then, Thomas, what was it you wanted to say?"

"There was a man in the entry awhile ago," said Thomas solemnly, "and he went out with your new silk umbrella."

SHOCKING THE SALAMBOS

Deed of Vengeance and Its Happy Sequel

By ROBERT J. PEARSALL

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Andrew Hemphill glanced at the gaudy prints outside of the Galey theater, started to pass on, hesitated, saw the sign "five cents" above the ticket window, turned in, paid his nickel and entered the folding doors.

Then he leaned back in his seat and stared at the white curtain on which moving pictures were presently being thrown, and in a few moments saw shaping there a little private moving picture of his own, so distasteful that he fought against the illusion for a while, and then resigned himself to it, as he had many times before, and let his memory run riot.

His father was the village merchant. Andrew had been offered the choice between a clerkship in the store and a position as teller and all round man in the village bank. In an evil hour he had chosen the latter.

Still, for two years everything had gone well. He had followed the leisurely routine of his work contentedly and might still be following it, if—

At the thought a snarl disfigured his face. If it had not been for John Barton! For years he had been saying that.

Every misfortune of his life he traced to this one case. When he found himself penniless and hungry, he muttered the words.

When he lay on freezing nights shelterless, for lack of money to hire himself a bed, he blamed it on John Barton.

It was a simple story. John Barton was the cashier. They two were the only employees of the bank, the only ones, save the president, who had access to the funds. There had been a robbery. Andrew had been arrested.

Part of the money was found in his room.

He found it impossible to account for his actions on the night of the robbery. He had been lured away by a faked message.

It was clearly a frameup against him, and by whom but John Barton? But he could not prove it.

Arrested and imprisoned, he lost his nerve. The jail was old and rickety, and one night he pried the bars away with a leg of the iron bathtub. He escaped, but only into a larger prison.

For to him, nameless, friendless, penniless, with a price on his head, offered by the Bankers' association, of which he shuddered to think, the freedom which he gained proved less desirable than the confinement from which he had fled.

Pursued by misfortune, haunted always by dread of recognition and arrest, he drifted from place to place, a nondescript wanderer, sometimes a worker, sometimes a tramp.

His life was ruined, and he knew it. And for its ruin he hated himself, and he hated doubly, with a hatred that had through years of brooding grown into a monomania, its first cause, John Barton.

The curtain ran up, and the show began. A short skirted singer and a black faced comedian appeared. Andrew stirred restlessly and wished himself again in the streets.

There followed a mediocre juggler and a man who went through the uninteresting process of being tied and shackled in various ways and then releasing himself. And then the feature bill of the evening was announced: "The great Salambos."

Andrew straightened himself with a convulsive start that caused his neighbors on either side to look at him apprehensively, for in the suave personage bowing from the side of the stage and smilingly introducing his own act he recognized John Barton!

It was impossible, but it was true. The same face, the same figure, the same voice, the same—Andrew strained his eyes—the same scar above the right eyebrow.

And while Andrew strove against the leash of his will, longing to spring upon the stage and throttle the man who had so wronged him, but holding himself nevertheless in his seat, the Salambos retired, the lights were dimmed and the act began.

Through a hazy mist of blood Andrew saw the rest of the performance.

He saw the great Salambos, enveloped in a mystic halo of yellow light, move stiffly upon the stage.

He heard the hated voice chanting monotonously the explanation of his feats.

"I am the human salamander," he said, "the man who is impervious to fire, heat and electricity. Now I grasp those glowing balls, white heated by 5,000 volts from your own city power house, five times the amount required to electrify the ordinary man."

"To touch me now would mean instant death. Now I blow flames from my mouth to prove that my body is like a raging furnace. Now I ignite this cloth from my finger tip, this cigar, this candle. Now!"

It was really a mystifying performance, but Andrew at first paid little attention to it.

He only knew that his enemy was before him, unsuspecting, and in his power.

But toward the last of the act an idea began to form, an idea so devilish that at first he recoiled from it, but so satisfying to his almost insane craving for revenge that he could not rid himself of it.

It was a continuous vaudeville show, and he sat through two performances.

When he finally left the idea had shaped itself. But as yet his unaccustomed mind only dabbled with it.

The knowledge that he could do the thing was a pleasing tidbit to his imagination. Its actual performance was impossible as yet.

It was an old, old story. Night after night he came to the Galey, sat unheeding through the first few acts, sat with strained attention through the performance of the Salambos, nursing his hatred, gloating over his enemy, accumulating his mind to the at first impossible deed.

He could not sleep; he could not eat; he could think of nothing but his revenge.

One of Andrew's many occupations had been that of a telephone linesman, so he went about his task that night in a workmanlike manner that excited no curiosity in the minds of those that happened to notice him.

He had timed the performance accurately. At the exact moment that John Barton appeared on the stage of the Galey in the character of the Salambos Andrew reached the top of a high pole just outside of the theater.

He seated himself astride the cross-piece bearing the heavy cables, insulated, but alive with deadly energy.

From one of these cables a small wire branched off into the Galey, supplying that building with light and also, as Andrew had learned, with the electricity used by the Salambos in his act.

Andrew, equipped with insulated pliers and heavy rubber gloves, removed the insulation from the small wire and from another cable with practiced hands.

Then he attached another short wire he had brought with him to the exposed stretch of cable.

He waited a moment. There was a burst of applause from within the theater.

He knew what that marked, the first exhibition of immunity on the part of the Salambos, the seizing of the electrically heated balls.

Instantly he dropped the wire from his pliers upon the exposed surface of the wire that led into the Galey, knowing that it would send 10,000 additional volts of electricity crashing through the body of his enemy.

There was a crackling sound like a thousand firecrackers.

A sudden white light flared through the screened windows of the theater.

The applause died out to a sickening silence, and Andrew heard the sound of a heavy fall.

Then came sudden screams and hoarse shouts and a sharp slam that Andrew knew for the hasty dropping of an asbestos curtain.

From out the exits of the theater poured a panic stricken mob, and Andrew dropped unobserved into its midst. And as he listened to the excited exclamations that came to him from every side, his madness dropped from him, and he saw himself for what he was—a murderer!

"It's what comes of playing with death!" said one man.

"It must have killed him instantly," said another. "Why, when he dropped there seemed nothing left of him. His clothes went that quick, like a flash. Lord, I can see it now."

"Here come the firemen. Make way, make way there."

Andrew slunk away up a side street. Of a sudden he was very sick.

He leaned weakly against the side of a building, and men passing thought him drunk.

Why had he done it? Why, why? Revenge on whom? For what? He could not remember.

He had killed the Salambos, they said. Who was the Salambos? What matter? He had killed him. He was a murderer. He had killed, killed—

After awhile he recovered to a certain extent and staggered away.

His memory came back, too, and he knew whom he had killed, and why, but it brought only fresh torture.

John Barton—why, he had played with John Barton as a boy! And he had killed him. No, no, impossible!

But, yes, he had killed the Salambos, and the Salambos was John Barton, and John Barton was the Salambos, and—

He found himself repeating this rig-marole aloud and checked himself in terror.

He saw people whom he met looking at him curiously, and tried to get a grip on himself.

But he kept on walking. He wanted to go back to his room, but he was afraid. Somebody or something might meet him there.

He wanted to go into a saloon and get a drink. It might steady him, but again he was afraid.

He walked, walked, walked. Some times he broke into a shambling run. He left the downtown district far behind.

His path now led between long rows of darkened houses, filled with sleeping people. Sleeping! He would never be able to sleep again.

Hours passed. Beneath a flickering street light he looked at his watch. It was 4 o'clock. Soon it would be daylight.

At the thought a mighty terror seized him and shook him from head to foot. Light!

How could he face the light? Stripped of its mantle of darkness, would not his guilt blazon itself to every eye?

But when the first sickly light of morning stole over the city he stopped and gasped and reeled back against a telephone pole.

For the instinct of the criminal had asserted itself, his unguided steps had shaped themselves to a circle, and he was standing in front of the Galey theater.

At the realization and at the sight of the dangling wires above that proclaimed the method of his crime he nearly fell.

For fully five minutes he stood with eyes staring and mouth agape.

Then something snapped in his brain like a cord, and the strain relaxed. He would hide his guilt no longer. With lagging but determined steps he started away, headed straight for the police station.

But his body, weak from its all night vigil, seemed about to fall him.

At the first street corner he stopped and, leaning against a building, waited for a car.

A taxicab whirled down the street. Andrew saw it without realization, and when it stopped in front of him and the occupant sprang out he still paid no attention.

It was only when he heard his own name called loudly that he roused himself with a start of terrified amazement.

But John Barton was dead!

His hand, however, was warm, and his voice was anything but the voice of a corpse.

"Andrew! As I live, Andrew Hemphill! You know me, don't you, Andy? Come, brace up! Hey, you," to the chauffeur, "give me a hand here. The man's fainted!"

When Andrew recovered consciousness he was in the Harbor Emergency hospital, and his hand was enveloped in the hand of the man whom he had thought he had murdered.

"Are you really alive?" he half whispered.

"Me? It's you that's the dead one, from appearances. What on earth was the matter?"

"I thought—"

"You don't mean to say that you thought you were still wanted back home? Lord! You've been cleared long ago."

"The president of the bank died and left a confession that he was the guilty one, that he had been short in his accounts and faked the robbery to cover the shortage and tried to cover his own steps by throwing the blame on you."

"Of course there's a technical charge of jail breaking against you, but that won't amount to a hang. And your old father's crazy to find you. We'll go back together. I've got to go back east and have another dummy made any way, and so—"

"Another dummy?"

"Yes. Don't you know that you're talking to the great Salambos?" Andrew shuddered. "Well, you are, and some crazy fool switched on about 20,000 volts of electricity last night and burned the dummy that the audience thought was myself into a crisp."

"The papers are full of it this morning. It's spoiled my graft here on the coast anyway until they forget about it, and so—"

But Andrew had fainted again.

Following Are a Few of the Items Which Appeared in the Gazette Years Ago This Week.

At a meeting of the committee for the Fourth of July, (dedication of the Soldiers Monument at North Weymouth) held in the Town Hall on Friday evening June 5th, Gen. B. F. Pratt in the chair, J. M. Whitcomb secretary, it was voted that Col. James L. Bates be invited to act as chief marshal.

Voted that Post 40 G. A. R. and all other organizations of soldiers, also all returned officers, soldiers, sailors and marines be invited to unite and join the parade on that day.

Voted that Maj. E. C. Pierce be invited to take charge of that part of the parade and that all soldiers report to him.

Voted that the several Masonic, Odd-fellows, Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, Fire Department organizations, and all other benevolent organizations, also the High schools and Public schools the Clergy soldiers of 1812 and all other persons in town be invited to join the procession.

Voted that Old Colony Encampment Knights Templars be invited to join and perform escort duty.

THIRTY ONE YEARS AGO.
The new steam fire engine designed for the Weymouth Fire Department, to be located at East Weymouth, arrived by the Old Colony railroad, Wednesday afternoon, and was housed at the engine house the Gen. Bates being removed to make room for her.

The new hose carriage has also arrived and has been named in honor of Chief Engineer Z. L. Bicknell.

On Saturday afternoon the fire department of the town will assemble at 1 o'clock, at the engine house in East Weymouth where a procession will be formed and headed by the Weymouth Band, will parade the principal streets. The new steamer will be in line, and a trial of her abilities will be made, at the bridge near Jackson square after which a collation will be served the firemen in Temple of Honor banquet hall, plates being laid there for 150, and 50 for the invited guests, in the Masonic hall.

TWENTY-THREE YEARS AGO.
Rev. Oliver Huckel will be installed as pastor of the Union church, on Tuesday June 23.

Caterpillars are still on the rampage and greet us everywhere. Presidents and other officers of village improvement societies can hardly agitate a more important subject than a vigorous war on these pests. It is late now but be on time next year.

THE Gun Club held another successful shoot last Saturday afternoon the weather being fine. There was a large number of participants. On percentage of birds killed C. F. White was first with 76 percent. F. Farrar secured second, 74 percent, Barnes third 66 percent.

In response to a call issued early in the week, Engine hall at East Weymouth was well filled last night with leading business men and citizens for the purposes of organizing a Commercial Club to promote the interests of the place. Dr. Joseph Chase was elected chairman and W. C. Earl secretary.

EUROPEAN POLICEMEN.
Clever in London, "Sloppy" in Paris and Polite in Berlin.

In humor, in urbanity, as in perfect control of his district, the London policeman is the nearest approach to perfection, writes Percival Pollard, who in "Vagabond Journeys" has a word to say of the various policemen of the world. He adds that in looks only our American policemen equal those of London.

To the stranger the policeman seems the polttest of all Londoners. Chiefly, however, it is in his control of traffic, awheel and afoot, that he is unrivaled. When you consider the narrowness of the streets you constantly marvel at the easy skill with which he solves his problem.

The Paris policeman never looks anything but "sloppy," and his notion of controlling traffic at crowded street crossings is enough to make the observer shout with laughter. No one minds him, and his attempts to regulate the speed of the Parisian cabbie only result in a slanging match. Observation of Parisian street traffic is all that is really necessary to impress you with the belief that in case of need the Paris policeman would always, with much noise and melodrama, arrest the wrong person.

The police of Berlin are vastly better than those of Paris. They do not look as well, according to our notions, as the English "constables," but they are fairly smart. The men are polite, control traffic inexorably and see to it that Berlin is one of the cleanest and most orderly of cities. But as reasoning individuals the Berlin policemen are hardly to be counted at all. When anything happens to you more serious than crossing a congested street or losing your way you are fairly certain of running hard against a city ordinance, mechanically enforced by the man on the beat.

No argument or persuasion prevails. There is the regulation, and here the instrument to enforce it. The human element is entirely absent. Both Italy and France are as to their police more human.

A RUSSIAN WAY
By M. QUAD
Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.

A man named Bogoff came to the United States in 1865 and acquired title to some lands in Montana. He returned to Russia, where he died without knowing the value of his property. A syndicate bought up all the surrounding land and wanted that belonging to Bogoff's heirs.

As a member of the syndicate I was sent to Russia to put the matter through. There was just one thing to be kept secret—Bogoff had paid about $700 for property worth over $100,000. I was to get hold of the land as cheaply as possible, giving no hint of its real value. Bogoff was a native of the port of Narva, on the gulf of Finland, and one day I landed there in search of information. I had my passport and other credentials and anticipated no trouble, but I was ignorant of the way things work in Russia. After taking up quarters at a hotel I called upon a lawyer to make inquiries and secure assistance. Yes, he had heard of the Bogoffs and thought the family could easily be found. I was to call again on the morrow and meanwhile he would gather such information as he could.

Two hours later the chief of police of Narva entered my room with two of his men. The astute officer questioned me for three long hours and was more suspicious at the finish than at the beginning. It was so queer that Bogoff should have purchased that land, so queer that he hadn't reported it on returning, so queer that I should make such a long journey to see the heirs, so queer that I should seek out a lawyer instead of calling at the police station. I knew exactly what all this meant. Had I said to the lawyer in the first place that there was a "divvy" in the matter for him and for the chief of police and two or three other officials all would have gone well.

When the chief realized that I could not be bled he had all my papers taken to his office. The police were ordered to look upon me as a suspicious person and a detective was detailed to watch me day and night.

Thinking I might carry on the business from St. Petersburg, I went to that city and again called upon a lawyer first of all. He was sharp enough to realize that the property was of considerable value, and without any beating around the bush he told me that he would find the heir and put the matter through for the sum of $5,000. I refused to bribe him and as a result soon discovered that no lawyer would have anything to do with the case, and only two days had passed before I was summoned to the office of the chief of police. He closed the interview by saying that I would be shadowed while I remained at the capital and by advising me to take no further steps on my own account to discover the Bogoffs.

I had not been provided with money to bribe any one. I must either defy the police and work up the case single handed or return and report a failure. Being firmly convinced that Mrs. Bogoff was in Narva, I secretly left St. Petersburg for that town. Securing rooms in a boarding house and disguising my personal appearance to a considerable extent, I prosecuted my inquiries under one excuse and another until I at length discovered the woman. She was living in her own home and in poor circumstances and was rejoiced at the prospect of selling the land, which she remembered her husband referring to as a poor investment on his part.

I must have the assistance of a notary to make out the papers, and it was while seeking this assistance that the police got track of me again. As soon as they interfered I was balked. They not only warned every notary in Narva against me, but the widow was obliged to take a journey and go into hiding. Things might have stopped there had I been a cool and placid man. When I found the police hounding me again I lost my temper and gave the chief my opinion of things in general and of his own conduct in particular. I was arrested; on what charge I never knew.

As soon as incarcerated I asked leave to communicate with the American minister. This request was refused. I was not allowed books, writing materials or other food than the regular prison fare and was, in fact, treated in all respects as a criminal. On the third day the chief of police sent for me and asked if I would leave Russia if given my liberty. I replied in the negative and was returned to prison. My threats that the matter would be thoroughly sifted by our representative only made him smile, and he quietly informed me that he would keep me in prison for the rest of my life if need be. On the seventh day he sent for me again. I had now changed my mind. I saw that I could be sent off to Siberia if the officials so desired and that there was no longer the slightest hope of accomplishing my errand. I therefore answered him that I was ready and willing to leave the czar's dominions at a moment's notice, and as a steamer was to leave port that evening four police officers were detailed to escort me on board. Not only that, but I was locked up in a stateroom and not set at liberty until noon next day. I found Americans, Englishmen and Frenchmen on the boat, but got no sympathy from any of them. On the contrary, I was called an idiot for my conduct, and every one agreed that I might have been packed off to Siberia without any one but the police being the wiser.

EATING IN BERLIN.

A Humorist's View of the Native's Wonderful Appetites.

The average Berliner has a double chin running all the way around and four rolls of fat on the back of his neck, all closely clipped and shaved, so as to bring out their full beauty and symmetry, and he has a figure that makes him look as though an earthquake had shaken loose everything on the top floor and it had all fallen through into his dining room.

Your true Berliner eats his regular daily meals, four in number and all large ones, and in between times he now and then gathers a bite. For instance, about 10 o'clock in the morning he knocks off for an hour and has a few cups of hard boiled coffee and some sweet, sticky pastry with whipped cream on it.

Then about 4 o'clock in the afternoon he browses a bit, just to keep up his appetite for dinner. This, though, is but a snack—say a school of Bismarck herring and a kraut pie, some more coffee and more cake and one thing and another—merely a preliminary to the real food, which will be coming along a little later on.

Between acts at the theater he excuses himself and goes out and prepares his stomach for supper, which will follow at 11 o'clock, by drinking two or three steins of thick Munich beer and nibbling on such small tidbits as a few links of German sausage or the upper half of a raw Westphalia ham.

There are forty-seven distinct and separate varieties of German sausage, and three of them are edible, but the Westphalia ham, in my judgment, is greatly overrated. It is pronounced Westfaliure, with the accent on the last part, where it belongs.

In Germany, however, there is a pheasant agreeably smothered in young cabbage, which is delicious and in season plentiful. The only drawback to complete enjoyment of this dish is that the grasping and avaricious German restaurant keeper has the confounded nerve to charge you, in our money, 40 cents for a whole pheasant and half a peck of cabbage—say enough to furnish a full meal for two tolerably hungry adults and a child.—Irvin S. Cobb in Saturday Evening Post.

HE WANTED A JOB.

The Red Bearded Sailor Who Insisted That He Could Sing.

One day many years ago, when Billy Emerson was in his heyday and all San Francisco was at his feet, he was accosted by a sailor with a long red beard. The sailor said that he could sing and wanted a job.

"I have no opening," said Emerson. The tar, however, was obdurate and several times during the day importuned Emerson to give him a chance. To get away from his tormentor Emerson was compelled to go to his hotel.

Near the theater was a saloon where the minstrel boys were wont to congregate after a show. It was of the usual kind, with a room in the rear, with a piano and a piano player. Into this room, when the performance was over, went the sailor and asked the man at the piano if he would change places with him and allow him (the sailor) to play in his place. The musician acquiesced.

The performers trooped to the front of the saloon, and soon there came from the rear room the strains of "Sally In Our Alley," sung as only one man in the world could sing it.

"Boys," said Emerson, "that's Tom Dixon."

A rush was made for the rear, where it transpired that the "sailor" was none other than the great minstrel tenor. He had gone to Australia with a company. It disbanded, and he worked his way home as an ordinary seaman, during which time he grew the long red whiskers.

Did he get the job with Emerson? You didn't know Billy or you would never have asked that.—Edward Le Roy Rice in Chicago Journal.

Not American at All.
A certain type of story—that having the sudden conclusion, such as "Willie Jones fired a cannon yesterday; the funeral will be tomorrow"—has been claimed as purely American in its origin. But, as a matter of fact, this kind of story is older than America itself. If you will turn to II Chronicles, xvi, 12, 13, you will find these words:

"And Asa in the thirty-ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet until his disease was exceeding great, yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. And Asa slept with his fathers."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Wants to Get Even.
Some day, when our bank account gets even lower than it is now, we are going to try to arrange to take a year's leave of absence and spend it with our wife's relatives, staying about half as long with each of them as each of them usually stays with us.—Ohio State Journal.

Not Quite.
"I sleep with your letters under my pillow," the modern lover wrote. Then he yawned and muttered to himself:

"At least I go to sleep over the letters. I suppose it's the same thing."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Once Was Enough.
Mrs. Church—Did you ever get your husband to try to wash the dishes?
Mrs. Gotham—Only once.
"Why only once?"
"Because the next day we had no dishes."—Yonkers Statesman.

Situation Sized Up.
The young girl had been engaged as an amanuensis by a society woman. She discovered that nearly every day the husband and wife had a quarrel, so she gave notice that she was going to leave. "Why?" inquired the lady, in surprise. "Oh, you don't need an amanuensis, madam," replied the girl. "What you want is a war correspondent."

TRAGIC BRAVERY.

Sublime Act of a Hero Who Went to a Watery Grave.

In the chapel at Glenalmond school in Perthshire, Scotland, there is a marble slab with this stirring story recorded upon it:

There was once in the school a pupil named Alexander Cummine Russell, who became an officer in the Seventy-fourth highlanders when only a lad of seventeen. In connection with the memorable loss of the Birkenhead he won immortal glory. The troopship struck upon a rock; the soldiers were formed in ranks upon the deck to die; the women and children were being saved in boats.

Russell was ordered into one of the boats to command it, and a little way off he watched with dimmed eyes the doomed ship. When she went down he saw creatures of the deep contending for his beloved comrades. Then he saw a sailor's form rise up close to the boat and a hand strive to grasp the side.

A woman in the craft called out in agony: "Save him! Oh, save him, sir! He is my husband," but there was no room for another, and the boat was in-boring heavily as it was. Russell looked at the woman and then at her children, then at those beseeching eyes in the deep, and, rising in the stern, he plunged into the water and helped the sailor into what had been his own place. Then amid a chorus of "God bless you" from every one in the boat the brave young officer turned to meet his death.—Pearson's Weekly.

SOME FAMOUS PAINTINGS.

A Tiny Work of Art and Rosa's Transformed Harpsichord.

The smallest painting in the world of distinctive merit was executed on the smooth side of a grain of corn by a Flemish artist. On this limited surface the artist painted in perfect detail a mill, a miller with a sack of grain on his back, a horse and cart and a group of several peasants standing in a road.

The largest picture ever painted is said to be a panorama of the Mississippi river, executed by John Banvard, an artist who died in Watertown, S. D., in 1891. The gigantic canvas was twenty-two feet high and nearly two miles long. It gave a detailed representation of 2,000 miles of the Father of Waters.

The largest of the old masters' canvases is Murillo's "Appearance of the Christ Child to St. Anthony of Padua." The picture is ten feet wide and eighteen feet high.

It is related that a friend called on Salvador Rosa in Florence one day and found him playing on an old harpsichord. The caller asked the artist why he kept such a worthless instrument.

"Why, it is not worth a scudo!" the friend said.

"I will wager," replied Rosa, "that it shall be worth a thousand before you see it again."

A bet was made. Rosa immediately painted a landscape on the lid that not only sold for 1,000 scudi, but was accounted a work of great merit.

Boasted Too Soon.

When the old Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz was staying at Holkham with Thom. s. Coke, then commonly known as "king of Norfolk," he boasted one evening at dinner that no man had ever dared to shoot at him and that if any one had ever attempted such a thing he would have shot the man dead on the spot.

The next day at the court the grand duke suddenly felt a shower of shot peppering his legs and, turning round in a fury to find whence it proceeded, saw William Coke with a gun leveled in his direction.

"I've got another muzzle ready," said William coolly. "Will you shoot?"—From "The Life of Thomas Coke, Earl of Leicester."

Reincarnated.

The school as a civic center having become overcrowded, it occurred to some bright mind to advocate the use of the home as a civic center.

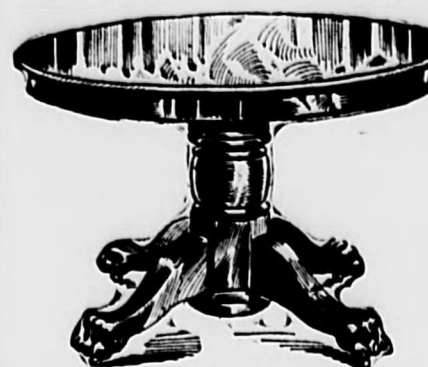

"The home is vacant so large a part of the day that it would seem that the highest efficiency would put it to some use other than as a possible place to sleep in after midnight."

This was immediately done, and the home began to come back. Thereupon the leading sociological writer wrote an article in which he proved again to the satisfaction of all that everything has a use.—Life.

AND TRANSCRIPT

WEYMOUTH, MASS., FRIDAY, JUNE 19, 1914.

VOL. XLVIII. NO. 14.

NEW ENGLAND PIONEERS.

Unveiling of Endicott Memorial.

To the memory of Richard Clark and John Endicott, who sailed from Weymouth to the Colony of New England in 1583 and 1628 respectively, Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain yesterday unveiled a stone column, with a bronze medallion and inscription, built on the spot at which the pioneers embarked for America. At the top of the column is a bust of John Endicott, the first Governor of Massachusetts Bay. Mrs. Chamberlain is the only daughter of the late Mr. W. C. Endicott, formerly Secretary of War, United States. Mrs. Chamberlain was accompanied by Mr. Austin Chamberlain. To meet the distinguished visitors civic, naval, and military representatives were invited to lunch.

—The Hon. Louis Cook, of Weymouth United States, who attended as a representative from that city, stated that in nine years they would be celebrating their 300th anniversary, and invited representatives from Weymouth in the west to attend.

Mr. Austin Chamberlain, in replying on behalf of Mrs. Chamberlain, said those early settlers took with them across the seas some of their best blood, and if they had made some return in latter days they hoped the account was not yet closed and that between them and the Motherland there might be a constant and ever-increasing interchange of thoughts, kindly friendship and hospitality; and in the sterner events of the world on their side and ours they might remember their old kinships and say, with that great American admiral when the day of trial came, "Blood is thicker than water."

Mr. Chamberlain referred to a story told by the Hon. L. Cook about a famous Endicott pear tree and said that Mrs. Chamberlain had at home at Highbury a paper knife cut from that identical tree, which still bore fruit. He could understand the wilderness of the New England country when Endicott went there, because Sir William Harcourt had told him that when he and Lady Harcourt were travelling through a God-forsaken part of the country over here she always told him it reminded her of home. (Laughter.)

Mrs. Chamberlain's message to Weymouth was that she prayed that the country which Endicott helped to found and the country which he left behind might continue to live at peace.

ANOTHER FLAG ON HIGH

More Than Two Thousand People Join in the Cheers.

Among the many interesting events connected with Flag Day celebration in town not the least was that of the Loyal Order of Moose Lodge No. 1299 at their new home Commercial square East Weymouth.

Invitations had been extended to all patriotic and fraternal organizations in town and to the public at large and the assembly was a large one embracing all ages and conditions yet orderly and seemingly interested in the spirit of the hour.

Stetson Shoe band was early on hand and contributed many selections during the afternoon.

Frank E. Briggs opened the exercises by calling upon Rev. Edward T. Ford to invoke a blessing and at its conclusion introduced Louis M. Beach S. D. of Lodge 1299 as master of ceremonies. Mr. Beach in behalf of his Lodge welcomed the people who had now filled the yard and adjacent streets and introduced M. E. Hawes to speak for the fraternal orders represented. James M. Griffin G. L. D. of the Loyal Order of Moose was next in order and spoke of the aims and objects of the order under whose auspices the gathering was held. Mr. Sheehy responded for the Board of Trade and was followed by two patriotic poems most ably rendered by master Leslie Sweet.

Waldo Turner for the patriotic bodies present paid a glowing tribute to the flag and made an earnest appeal for its protection.

John E. Beck, ex-mayor of Chelsea and ex-state senator, was the final speaker and the origin of, and duties to the flag as told by him won for him a hearty applause. Meanwhile the beautiful towering flag staff with a suggestive ball at the top had been watched with interest.

To Miss Maxine Beach had been assigned the honor of pulling the halyard which should unfold the flag to the breeze and at the given word the act was gracefully performed, big Glory swinging out in the breeze and a shower of little Glories rained down to be hustled for by the children. Bugle notes which were echoed from the Washington school building and re-echoed from all around filled the air. Star Spangled Banner and America were sung and the Loyal Order of Moose had earned the right to the term "Loyal."

The Town Survey has filed at the Town offices a complete revision of his survey and planning up to Jan. 1914.

A petition signed by M. E. Hawes and eighteen others was filed with the Selectmen asking them to call a special Town Meeting with the following article in the warrant: "To see what sum of money the town would raise and appropriate for the purchase of a Fire Truck for the Fire Department of the town or take any action thereon."

This article is followed by two others: one from South Weymouth asking that $9,000 be raised for a fire apparatus in that part of the town and another asking for $3,500 for an auto truck in North Weymouth.

These several petitions were placed on file pending a possible early action of the committee appointed at the March meeting to consider the needs of the Fire Department.

The above Fire Department committee journeyed to Hull last night and inspected the pumping fire engine in that place.

Accident.

Eight persons were injured in a collision between two Bay State street railway electric cars at Newcomb square, Wednesday morning, all the injured with one exception being residents of this place. John Robery Jr. of East Braintree and John Laurie of this place were said to be the most severely injured. They were taken to the Quincy City Hospital and later in the day removed to their homes.

Others injured were William Curry of Phillips street, Miss Elizabeth Connell, chief operator at the Fore River plant, James Curley, J. Edward Bates, E. J. Cote and Carl Dowd. All were employees of the Fore River Ship Company and were on their way to work. A brake failing to work is said to be the cause of the accident.

Graduation at High School

NORMAN A. WALKER, Salutatorian and Treasurer. MISS MARGARET C. REIDY, Valedictorian. MISS HELEN B. HUNT, Essayist.

Another year in the history of Weymouth's public schools is at an end, and from the opening services at 8.45 a. m. on Tuesday, September 2, 1913, to the closing exercises of the graduation at the High School last evening, the year has been one of the most successful on record. Unofficial reports state that nearly two hundred pupils moved on, either to higher grades or to further education, beyond our public schools.

Since the discontinuance in 1910 of grammar school graduation exercises in town, the main feature of the closing of the school year is the graduation at the Weymouth High School. This event, this year as usual, was a feature of much grandeur and interest.

The exercises were held yesterday afternoon and evening in the High school building at Weymouth Center and all the public events were highly enjoyed by an immense crowd of relatives and friends of the graduating class of 1914. The weatherman was evidently among the special guests as he very kindly turned out an ideal day for the graduation. Thirty-seven pupils received their diplomas for completing the four year courses and two were awarded special certificates.

Those who were not fortunate enough to obtain reserved seats for the afternoon events, began to congregate early in order to become seated in the best of the unserved sections. The first group to enter the hall arrived about one fifteen and from that hour until two-thirty, the time of starting the program, the ushers were kept on the jump every moment, securing seats for the constant influx of people into the spacious auditorium.

At two-thirty-four, when the orchestra of the High School struck the opening chord of the selection by which the senior class and the undergraduates were to march in, every seat in the large hall was taken, as well as those in the ante-rooms, and many were standing at the rear and sides of the auditorium.

The novelty adopted last year of having the undergraduates march in from both sides of the hall, was carried out again this year and the two hundred odd pupils were seated in a very short time, thus doing away with the tedious delay of some years past.

The class of 1917 was the first to enter the hall, with Clarence Parker Whittle, the class marshal, at the head. After the freshmen came the sophomore and junior classes and then Mr. Whittle marched to room 4, and escorted the graduating class to their seats on the large platform, where they were immediately the recipients of one of the greatest bursts of applause from the audience ever given a class at a graduation.

The thirty-nine members of the class grouped on the stage made a most imposing picture indeed; the young ladies to the number of twenty-four, all charmingly gowned in white, and the fifteen young men in their dark suits and light scarfs; the artistic decorations, potted plants, ferns and cut flowers, adding much to the brilliancy of the scene.

After the pupils had become seated and the audience had quieted somewhat, the following interesting program was carried out without a break in the entire card:

Processional Invocation
Rev. W. M. Newton
Overture, "Romantic" (Keler Bela)
High School Orchestra Salutatory Address
Norman A. Walker
Chorus, "Two Grenadiers" (Schumann) Entire School
Essay
Miss Helen B. Hunt
Chorus, "Maria Mari" (Di Capua)
Entire School
Vocal Solo, "A Birthday" (R. Huntington Woodman)
Miss Flora E. MacDonald
Valedictory Address
Miss Margaret C. Reidy
Chorus, "March of the Toreadors" (Bizet)
Entire School
Presentation of Diplomas
Class Ode Benediction
Rev. E. T. Ford

In accordance with the idea adopted last year, the address by an outside speaker was dispensed with and an essay by one of the class members was substituted. As at the initial working of this feature, it was as highly pleasing to the large audience this year.

The salutatory address was delivered this year by an East Weymouth young man, Norman Augustus Walker, who also holds the honor of being treasurer of his class. Mr. Walker chose as his subject "The Causes of the Panama Tolls Question," and his address showed extremely careful and hard study on the tolls question. His fine manner of delivery was also very pleasing to the large gathering.

Miss Margaret Catherine Reidy of East Weymouth delivered the valedictory address this year, and like her sister, Miss Helen Reidy, four years ago, delivered one of the most able addresses ever listened to in town. Her subject was "Tennyson's Poetry" and no more pleasing speaker ever stood on the platform at our High School graduation. Miss Reidy's charming personality added much to the brilliancy of the address.

Miss Helen Beatrice Hunt of Weymouth Landing was the essayist this year, choosing for her subject "The Army of the Unemployed." Miss Hunt's address was very interesting and well delivered and like Miss Reidy and Mr. Walker, she was accorded a grand ovation at the close of her essay.

The chorus work of the entire school, directed by Mr. J. W. Calderwood, Weymouth's able music conductor, was as usual of a high class and the vocal solo "A Birthday," by Miss Flora E. MacDonald, was also highly enjoyed.

A feature of this year's graduation, as well as of several recent school events, was the fine playing of the High school orchestra, in charge of Mr. Calderwood. This orchestra played for the marching of the pupils into the hall, both in the afternoon and evening and gave several selections in the afternoon program and also in the evening. The members of the orchestra this year were: Norman A. Walker, Miss Jeannette Shaw, Percy

Weymouth High School Base Ball Team of 1914

Sitting: Gorman 2b, C. Condrick cf. p. Talbot rf, Richardson 1b, Reilly ss, Cassese mgr, Glover 3b, Mauro lf, Cosgrove coach

Weymouth High school turned out one of the most successful baseball lines in the history of the school the past season.

Out of nineteen games played, twelve resulted in victories for the Weymouth boys. Among the fast teams in the section that bowed to the supremacy of the W. H. S. boys were B. Ockton High twice, English High, Mechanic's Art's High, Quincy and Rockland.

Fraher captain and catcher, was the mainstay of the team from the start.

His tight and all around playing helped the team to a large degree all the season. In the box Lou Callahan and Langford did most of the work with Connie Condrick pitching a few games. Both Callahan and Langford pitched winning ball and were fully as good as the opponents met.

At first base Vender and Richardson played a fine game, while "Hope" Gorman showed the best keystone sack work shown since the palmy days of "Dudie" O'Dowd and Carl Loud. Russ Reilly at short stop and "Scoot" Glover at the hot corner looked after the left side of the diamond in an unapproachable manner and in the field Mauro, Talbot and C. Condrick played consistent ball from the start. Eddie Condrick as sub catcher was a fine understudy to Captain Fraher in every way.

The manager was Anthony Cassese and the coach John Cosgrove.

Of the regular nine this year, Glover, Fraher and Reilly are lost for next year, by graduation.

Railroad, Taxation and Election Bills
Keeping Committees Busy—Principle of State Supervision Gets a Jolt—Greater Power Placed in Hands of State Tax Commissioner

Quite a little time left before the legislature intends to quit. This will be cheering information for those who are tempted to believe that no man's life or property are safe while the legislature is in session.

This year, however, in lack of positive accomplishment the saying has been abundantly disproved. A few of the governor's recommendations are going through, but they are not revolutionary. Even his railroad recommendations appear likely to be greatly modified. It is suggested that the legislature may in its railroad law court the threatened federal proceedings which the governor thinks lead to a receivership for one or both roads.

July 1 is the tentative time set for prorogation. But that probably means a week later. All this week the railroad committee, consisting of Senator Fisher and Representative Washburn, have been in agony over the railroad bill, while almost everybody else has been awaiting the result with curiosity.

The taxation bills and the election bills are practically the only other matters that are keeping the state house active. When the railroad bill is finally decided upon the end of the session will be quickly in sight.

State Supervision Hit
The growing principle of state supervision got a bit of a knockout when the bill providing for the supervision of accountants was killed, and when the barbers' licensing bill was blocked by the refusal of the house to accept the senate amendment.

The accounting bill provided for a state board to grant licenses and to make examinations. A similar provision was in the barbers' bill. The senate amended the latter bill so as to provide for a homemade haircut, but the house thought that these too ought to be supervised, and the bill will probably die between the branches.

This state supervision matter is extremely costly for the commonwealth. It is what has made the state tax jump from $1,500,000 fifteen years ago to about $10,500,000 this year.

There are precious few things that do come under the authority of some board nowadays.

New Tax Probe
For those who expect to inherit property it will be well to remember the little law that went on the statute books this year relative to the power of the tax commissioner to investigate for the purpose of discovering taxable property.

Prior to the enactment of this law it was possible for one in expectation of death to place in an envelope bonds bearing coupons and leave it with the executor to deliver after death. Now, however, the tax commissioner is given the power to summon all persons and put them under oath as to what they know about the value of an estate. No executor may do as he did before and decline to tell of it.

This law is a long departure in placing authority in the hands of the tax commissioner. It is the only step that will be taken this year. The law compelling persons under heavy penalty to declare their property for taxation, the law giving the commissioner the right to revalue estates and the law giving him the right to assess the estate of a decedent three times its value if it is discovered that it has been heretofore untaxed, will not go through this year.

One little law that is going through which limits the power of the tax commissioner is the amended one proposed by Representative Souther of Cohasset.

This law provides that the commissioner shall not boost the valuations of a city or town in making up his valuations for the apportionment of the state tax, unless he notifies the assessors of his intention, gives a hearing and states his reasons for it. This bill has just gone to the governor.

Children Taught Farming
The encouragement of agriculture among children is helped along this year again. Last year the state board of agriculture was given $1000 for the purpose of buying prizes for children who produced agricultural exhibits.

This year the amount was raised to $2000, and the state board is quoted as saying that the scheme has worked wonderfully well.

Massachusetts has just begun to wake up as to the possibilities of her agriculture. Governor Walsh was astonished a little while after he took office at the work being done at Amherst.

In a few years we shall have the abandoned farm under the operation of scientists and going west for apple raising will be laughed at.

Walsh Recognized the Difference Governor Walsh signed the bill extending for three years the term of the transit commission in Boston and the terms of the commissioners. Thereby he stopped the ocean of talk about the legislature trying to take from the governor the power of appointment.

The governor recognized the difference between the executive functions of a board which makes contracts for the building of tunnels and subways and the executive functions of a board which frames policies and approves of rates and service like the public service commission.

New Banking Laws
The Siegel bank failure has been productive of several important banking laws this year. Of these chapter 567 is the most drastic. It provides that any official or employee of a bank who receives money for deposit knowing that the bank is insolvent may be punished by three years' imprisonment or a fine of $5000 or both fine and imprisonment. The provisions of the bill also extend to private bankers. The other laws lay down more rigid methods of bank inspection.

One of the principal factory laws this year is that which compels the installation of medical emergency chests to be satisfactory to the state board of labor and industries.

The medical chest law was passed several years ago, but it was found that the local boards of health made no rules which insured the placing of chests in factories. The fact was disclosed that employers quite generally were willing to install such chests, but that they were given no assistance at all by the state law.

New Diamond Law
Senator Bagley's committee on mercantile affairs did not find the cost of living so high but that there was need of a new diamond weighing law in Massachusetts. The new law provides that the unit of weight shall be 200 milligrams and its multiples and divisions for each carat.

This is of no far reaching importance even to the June brides, who were presented with preliminary tokens some time ago. But it is of importance to the jewelry interests of the state.

The Flag Bill
There was a great deal of weeping among the Progressives over the bill which forbade the attaching of any device, political or otherwise, to Old Glory, and they said that the law was especially aimed at their method of campaigning, which last year consisted of placing the words "Progressive Party" at the top of the flag.

But the bill went through both house and senate and to the governor, to whom the Progressives made their last protest. His excellency, however, signed the bill and it is now chapter 570 of the acts of 1914.

Last year certain Progressives who put their party label at the top of the flag were summoned to court, but the decision was that under the existing law advertising of any character could not be suspended from the flag, but that the flag could be suspended from advertising.

Milk Legislation
At last all the milk legislation has gone over to the next general court. The milk consumers lost their bill last week. They then tried to amend the bill of Senator Clark and the amendments were lost.

So that the inspection remains as it always has, in the hands of the local boards. Boston does a great amount of inspection from which other populous parts of the state derive a benefit, and would continue to do it. But the fear of state inspection where there is now little or no inspection has a powerful effect in solidifying the opposition to the bill.

Taxes and Real Estate
Senator Gifford's speech on the resolve providing for a constitutional amendment which shall allow the legislature to impose a low tax rate upon securities indicated the dread which some people have lest additional burdens be placed on real estate.

The Gifford amendment to the resolve provided that the new tax rate on stocks and bonds should not go below $10 on $1000.
The senate rejected the amendment on a voice vote after an explanation by Chairman Nichols of the committee on taxation that real estate was today bearing extra heavy burdens because of the escape outright of so much intangible property.

There is grave doubt as to whether the constitutional resolve will go through, but there has been manifested this year a more decided interest than ever before in getting the tax system of the state changed to a more reasonable basis, and the change is certainly coming. Incidentally it may be said that the Gifford speech was a very able presentation of that side of the case.

Contributory Pensions
It does not look now much as if any of the contributory pension reform would go through. The bill proposed at the beginning of the session by the pension commission was an elaborate one, carefully worked out. But it had the disadvantage of trying to cover too much ground and thereby incurring much active hostility. It is generally recognized that the contributory pension system is the one best calculated to succeed in the long run. But the question of getting public employees used to it is almost too difficult for solution in one year.

The most active opponents of the pending bill are the firemen and police, and they are doing very effective work against it.

Curley and Walsh
So intense has grown the feeling between Boston city hall and the state house that some of the politicians have said that it would be a difficult matter for Mayor Curley to support Governor Walsh this fall.

Firemen's Memorial Service.

Weymouth Firemen Pay Tribute to Departed Members.

The Weymouth Firemen's Relief Association is not as old (only sixteen years) as many others in town but those years have been years of large relief and for mation of strong ties of friendship which friendship is yearly manifested by a memorial service and that for the current years was observed last Sunday.

During the early morning hours graves of departed members, other than those buried at North Weymouth, were visited by detail and decorated with floral emblems.

At 9 o'clock members from all parts of the town assembled at the Engine House in Ward 1 and with the following line formed, proceeded to the North Weymouth Cemetery where brief exercises were held and graves decorated.

Chief Marshall Edgar S. Wright, president of the association.

Platoon of Weymouth police, Chief of Police Patrick Butler commanding. Stetson Shoe Band, 25 men, George White leader.

Fire Chief Walter W. Pratt and District Chiefs John Q. Hunt of East Weymouth, Mathew O'Dowd of South Weymouth, Russell B. Worster of Weymouth Landing and Philip W. Wolfe of North Weymouth.

Weymouth Firemen's Relief Association, 108 men, ex-firemen and citizens.

At the North Weymouth cemetery the 120th grave was decorated and then the line proceeded to the Old North Church where memorial services were held.

The church decorations were under the supervision of Miss M. Minnie Hunt and the design covered the Memorial Day and Flag Day suggestions. Organ voluntary, "Grand Offertory," Mrs. Fred C. McDowell; anthem, "Great and Marvellous," solo part by Myron P. Ford, chorus choir; invocation, Rev. Edward J. Yaeger; trio, "At Eventide There Shall Be Light," Mrs. Madie Millett, Mrs. Annie McDowell and Mrs. Eveline Sherman Philbrook; prayer, sermon on the subject, "Immortality," bass solo and chorus, "The Earth is the Lord's," Fred C. McDowell and church choir; organ, postlude, "Grand Chorus," Mrs. F. C. McDowell.

Passing Fast Away.

Lines suggested to Rev. (Comrade) Frank B. Cressey, of Cambridge, by the death of Comrade Horace L. Smith, of Weymouth, Mass., and read at his funeral June 18, 1914. Dedicated to Reynolds Post, No. 58, G. A. R.

They're passing, passing fast away,
The soldiers gray of that dark day
When Treason dared to lift foul hand
To strike our nation from the land.

Full fifty years have come and gone
Since stars and stripes at first went down,
Since Union blood began to pour O'ring to traditions God of War.

For years the blood as river flowed;
For years brave men were daily moved
As grass before time's scythe so keen,
While houses of love were houses of pain.

These battle slain we'll never forget,
Their val'rous deeds are with us yet.
For land they saved we bless our God
While standing near their covering sod.

Nor will we cease to greet the men Whose Patriot hearts 'en now as then
Are strong for Country's twice born flag;
Our efforts for it ne'er shall lag.

Our numbers now, how sadly few;
They seem but as the morning dew
Which comes to cheer, then dies away
It's place quick given to added day.

And so the oft Grand Army tread
As to the camp of Silent Dead
Comrades bear one in army blue
Who with them was for Country true.

To-day another Comrade's gone,
To-day our hearts again are torn;
But still we know our God will bless,
He ne'er will leave us comfortless.

As soldier life was not in vain
So soldier death now speaks of gain,
Of land with blood price fully bought,
Of Nation strong with Freedom thought.

And so again, at Comrade's bier,
Our loyal hands we raise to cheer
Each Patriot true throughout the land,
And vow again for God to stand.

FOR HOW LONG?

Weymouth Raises a Pertinent Question.

When a neighbor tells us that he has recovered from a serious illness, the first question that naturally arises is, "How long will he keep well?" Temporary relief is one thing, but a lasting cure is altogether different. There is nothing temporary about the work of Doan's Kidney Pills, as the following Weymouth evidence proves beyond a doubt.

Mrs. O.W. Binney, 17 Norfolk street, Weymouth, Mass., says: "My kidneys were very weak. The action was irregular and the kidney secretions were unnatural. My back ached and I was often nervous. I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and began using them. They made me well."

A SECOND STATEMENT.

When Mrs. Binney was interviewed on July 11, 1913, she said: "I have had no symptoms of kidney complaint since Doan's Kidney Pills made a cure in my case some years ago. I gladly confirm the statement I gave then, praising this remedy."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co. Buffalo, New York, Sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take, no other.

A Mystery of the Sea

By EUNICE BLAKE

The night was pitchy dark as Captain MacArthur, master of the bark Penguin, stood on the deck of his ship listening to a sound that greatly disturbed him. He thought he heard a bell attached to a buoy. But it was so faint that he was not sure that what he heard was not one of those ringings within his ears that some persons are subject to or a freak of his imagination.

There it was again, this time a trifle more distinct.

The Penguin was coming westward and was midway between Gibraltar and New York. The Azores and Madeira had been left several hundred miles behind. True, clouds had prevented an observation for several days, but Captain MacArthur had so much sea room that he had not the slightest fear of a near shore. Indeed, he was in the middle of the Atlantic ocean. Nevertheless he was approaching a bell buoy, for the tolling came with the irregularity of the waves.

Fearing to approach any nearer to it, he gave orders to the helmsman to steer in a circle while the lead was being thrown. The boson reported no bottom, but the captain's fears were not allayed. The sound of the bell was rapidly growing more distinct. There was the same irregularity of the strokes throughout, indicating that it was tolling by the waves. MacArthur had heard these sounds as long as he had been at sea, and they had always arisen from the same instrument, a bell buoy.

There can be nothing more calculated to throw a man off his equilibrium than one of these paradoxical occurrences. We hear or see or feel something; we know what it is, and yet we know that it is not what our senses tell us it is. It is liable to come to us in dreams, but rarely when we are awake. Captain MacArthur momentarily dreaded to strike a sunken rock, and yet he knew that there was no such danger within a thousand miles of him. He asked the few men who were on deck with him if they heard the tolling, and all said they did, but none of them could give any explanation of it. Some of them knew little of navigation or geography, but there was none so uninformed that he did not know that there were no sunken rocks in the middle of the Atlantic ocean.

Yet there is always an uncertainty to break down one's courage. Might there be in that vast wilderness of waters one rock remaining for centuries undiscovered? Might not ships that have sailed never to be heard from have been lost on this infinitely small point in so vast an area?

Nonsense! If such were the case there would be no bell buoy to warn ships away. And if there were such a rock protected by a buoy it would be on the charts.

Something like this was running through Captain MacArthur's mind. Probably his was more keenly alive to the matter than any of his crew because on him rested the responsibility for the lives of all and of the ship. There were one or two of the more superstitious who gave a different explanation of what they heard. One imputed it to evil spirits who were using it to drive the ship away from deep waters or waters clear of other ships on to an area of danger. Another considered it a tolling for a ship that had at some time gone down on that very spot. But while every one listened and thought not one spoke his interpretations of the mystery.

As the sound of the tolling indicated approach by its increasing distinctness, so having reached a maximum, it indicated recession by a gradual dying, till at last it was heard no more. Then the captain breathed a sigh of relief, which was imitated by the others. The mystery, whatever it was, had passed as mysteriously as it had come.

But it came again. The next day came a storm from the west, and the Penguin, after beating up against it, at last was obliged to turn and ride before it. By evening the storm had spent its force, and the ship was again put on her course. Near midnight was again heard that irregular melancholy tolling. This second visit, finding the crew tired and depressed from their experience with the storm, had a keener effect upon them than the night before.

Moreover, superstition seizes upon us when we are worn out. Captain MacArthur looked troubled. His officers listened to the strokes in silence, while some of the crew muttered prayers to heaven for protection from this unknown evil. Again the sounds approached, reaching a maximum of distinctness, then died away. But in this case they were longer, and the strokes clanged louder, as if made by fierce waves.

In the morning the outlook reported a ship on the starboard quarter. She was without mast or sail and seemed to have been disabled, doubtless by the recent storm. As the Penguin approached her the crew heard again the mysterious tolling. The captain, who had brought his glass to bear on her as soon as he heard it, lowered the glass and said:

"The riddle is solved. What we have heard is the bell of a derelict." And so it turned out. When a boat's crew stepped on the stranger's deck they found that the bell cord had rotted away and left the clapper to swing as the ship was tossed about by the waves.

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

Men Do It Because They Are More Attentive Than Women.

A German professor who has been making a study of the problem declares that men fall asleep in church because they pay more attention to the sermon than do the women. Further, he declares the average woman does not begin to grasp the purport of the sermon; that she is far slower of understanding than man.

The man will watch the minister every minute, he will concentrate all his mind upon the preacher and what he is saying, he will watch his every gesture and every motion of his lips and listen to every word until finally he drops off to sleep simply because he has watched so steadily, gazed so intently, that he has hypnotized himself.

If the woman does not grasp the meaning of the sermon so readily, if her mentality is not quite so keen and quick, one would think she would fall asleep. But the fact remains that she has plenty to interest her. A man cannot look about the church and be interested in John Jones' cravat or William Smith's vest or Sam White's cuff buttons. He doesn't care anything about them, but a woman will sit quietly in church, she will hear what the minister is saying without giving much thought to it, but she will be interested in everything every other woman is wearing, and there is enough to keep her just moderately entertained and wide awake.—Chicago Tribune.

HAD FAITH IN HIS IDEAS.

Julius Verne Felt the Things He Wrote Would Come to Pass.

Anything new about that wonderful man, Julius Verne, is invariably interesting. And in the Paris Temps Felix Duquesnel, who knew the author well, tells quite a lot about him that is "not generally known."

"I believe I invent possible things," Verne used to say, "which is very naive of me, because all that I write will be realized. Human knowledge will demolish the impossible." But if he believed in the realization of his imaginings his friends did not at first believe that he would be successful as an author.

One day, according to M. Duquesnel, when Verne was in the company of a number of his friends, he exclaimed with great seriousness:

"Mes enfants, I think I am about to leave you. I have the idea which, according to Girardin, is necessary to a man if he is going to make his fortune. I am going to write a romance in a new form of my own invention. If it succeeds it will be, I'm certain, the lode of the gold mine."

The friends laughed. "Laugh away," said Verne, "we shall see who laughs last."

A few weeks later "Five Weeks in a Balloon" appeared and was an immediate success. He had found his "lode," which he continued to develop for half a century.—London Letter in Milwaukee Sentinel.

Promises in Politics.

During a municipal campaign in Chicago a politician dropped in one morning to see a certain grocer. During the conversation that took place the politician asked, "And I may count upon your support, may I not?"

"Why, no, I am sorry to say," replied the grocer. "The fact is, I have promised my support to the other candidate."

The politician laughed. "Ah," said he, "in politics promising and performing are two different things."

"In that case," said the grocer cordially, "I shall be glad to give you my promise, sir."—Lippincott's.

"Painting the Town Red."

"That expression, 'painting the town red,' is not," writes a correspondent "the creation of some unknown cockney genius, as some would seem to infer. Its birth has been traced to 'The Divine Comedy.' Dante, led by Virgil comes to the cavernous depths of the place swept by a mighty wind where those are confined who have been the prey of their passions. Two faces arise from the mist—the faces of Francesca and Paolo. 'Who are ye?' cries Dante in alarm, and Francesca replies sadly, 'We are those who have painted the world red with our sins.'"—London News.

Shattered.

He was a Hollander, just arrived in this country to seek his fortune, and he had much to say to his host. But he had great difficulty in regulating his pronunciation, and at times his words were almost unintelligible to his host's small boy, who sat in a corner of the room somewhat mystified. At last the Hollander departed, and the small boy said to his father:

"Daddy, is he a broken English man?"—New York Post.

Lost.

The mistress of the house had mislaid her eyeglasses. She asked the old negro servant if she had seen them. "No'm, honey," said Aunt Missouri. "I ain't seen 'em. But I'll 'fin 'em fo' you. Jess tell me now was dey in de shell?"—New York Post.

Not So Sudden.

"I have saved up $500 so that I could ask you to be my wife."

"This is rather sudden."

"Sudden? I've been scrimping for three years."—Pittsburgh Post.

Man, Poor Man!

Mrs. Flutter—Mrs. Crabapple says her husband kisses her goodbye every morning of his life. Mr. Flutter—I often wondered what gave him that sour expression.—Smart Set.

DISTRICT NURSE ASSOCIATION

Membership of 404 At Start of Movement.

The meeting at the Clapp Memorial hall on Monday evening to form a Visiting Nurse association in Weymouth, was a very successful one, 130 persons were present. Mrs. Merchant and Miss Orcutt gave a very spirited selection which was very much appreciated. The chairman of the club committee Mrs. Harriet B. Voorhees gave a short history of the movement to establish a nurse, Dr. Joseph Chase spoke for the physicians of the town and declared that a nurse would be invaluable to the Doctors. The Rev. Mr. Alvord spoke for the ministers praising the movement and believed the town, would be greatly benefited by the presence and work of a visiting nurse. A motion to form an association having been carried in a previous meeting, a nominating committee was chosen, to present a list of officers and the names of 48 persons, to constitute the managing board of the association was presented. These officers directors and committees, were voted upon and elected. There are now 404 persons who have promised to become members of the association. The yearly dues of $1.00 per member, providing the money, for the salary of the nurse, it is not unreasonable to expect that in a population of 13,000 there will be at least 1,000 of our towns people, who will be disposed to help this vigorous infant. Mrs. William E. Ames the treasurer and Mrs. William A. Wheaton asst. treasurer are now ready to receive membership dues and contributions.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. Harriet B. Voorhees, president; Mrs. William E. Thayer, Mrs. W. A. Wagner, Mrs. Edwin R. Sampson, vice presidents; Mrs. Fred L. Doucette and Mrs. Edward P. Hunt, secretaries; Mrs. W. E. Ames, treasurer; Mrs. William A. Wheaton, assistant treasurer; Miss Lillian Curtis, Miss Mary A. Fogg, Mrs. Frederick Harris, Mrs. Nellie T. Carroll, Mrs. Arthur Cunningham, directors for three years; Mrs. E. E. Leonard, Mrs. Christopher Slinnett, Mrs. William Wall, Mrs. Joseph Chase Jr., Mrs. W. B. Clapp directors for two years; Mrs. J. Herbert Libby, Mrs. George D. Bullock, Miss Harriett Ripley, directors for one year; Mrs. C. Will Bailey, membership committee; Mrs. Elbridge Nash, Miss Carrie Robinson, Mrs. Arthur Alden, Mrs. James Ford, Mrs. Otis Torrey, nurse committee; Mrs. J. C. Fraser, Mrs. W. A. Drake, Mrs. Frederick Cate, Mrs. Elbridge Nash, Mrs. George Bean, supply committee; Mrs. James B. Jones, Mrs. Arthur V. Harper, Mrs. John Ahearn, Miss Florence K. Howe, Mrs. Stephen French, Mrs. J. Paint Put-on.

Think of paint put on and not by the gallon.

A gallon of paint in the can is of no account to anybody. Put it on. Now reckon its cost and value.

The secret is, one paint goes twice as far as another. A good one goes twice as far as a bad one.

You have a job, say an average job. It'll take 10 gallons Devco and 12 or 15 or 18 or 20 of middling poor very-poor and trash. You know painters' wages in your town. Put the price of a gallon of paint and the painter's day wage together. You can, we can't.

Devco costs less than any inferior paint; there are hundreds of them.

One paint is as good as another, so long as it lasts good; one lasts months and another years; and the one that goes furthest lasts longest.

SHUT-OFF

A Public-Utility Company — like a merchant — suffers from delinquent and non-paying accounts. But a merchant does not need to furnish his wares to a poor paying prospect, while the public-service company must furnish its wares to any one desiring them — of course subject to any reasonable regulation.

The merchant covering a smaller area well knows the standing of his customers, but the utility company covering a proportionately larger territory must often take the risk or undergo considerable expense to investigate its prospects' financial standing.

To reduce these risks to a minimum, it is necessary to make rules to govern the credit or financial reliability of a consumer.

A merchant can indefinitely extend his credit to a customer he knows is sure to pay, but a utility company must serve all alike, and to prevent undue loss, must enforce its rules on all alike.

Our company is not desirous of pushing anyone, but, in order that its sales do not show waste, has fixed on six weeks as the maximum time in which it can serve a consumer with gas without payment. All gas bills are due on the first day of the month following the consumption, but the time of payment is extended fifteen days and during that time discount is allowed. After the fifteenth, the gross bill is due and on or about the seventeenth a note is sent to all consumers who have not paid their bills, calling their attention to the unpaid account. One week later, if the account is still uncared for, another reminder is sent to the delinquent consumer asking that the settlement be arranged for and the annoyance and expense of a meter removal for non-payment be avoided.

Then in the failure of this request, on the sixteenth of the following month, if the account is still uncared for, a formal "Shut Off" letter is sent to the delinquent notifying him that unless settlement is arranged within twenty-four hours, we will be compelled to discontinue our service.

We are human and we have an abundance of sympathy — — — we are willing to make any reasonable arrangements for settlement — — — but we have no sympathy for anyone who deliberately ignores our requests and makes no effort to arrange a settlement after all our efforts. Have you? Don't you think we have done all that could be expected of us?

Planning Board Meet

The Planning Board appointed at the last Town Meeting under a new Statute Law promises to be an important and valuable factor in town matters.

It is intended by the Board to hold monthly meetings in the form of advisory meeting with officials of the several departments and any citizen who has suggestions to make. On Tuesday evening a meeting was held with the Selectmen, Water Commissioners, Board of Health and others.

Our water system was discussed to quite an extent and much information gathered from chairman Hoffman and superintendent Stevens. The system is shown to have got far behind the increasing demands in it inequality and irregularity of pressure which require many changes to meet the changed condition.

The fire department came up for discussion and it was conceded by all that there is immediate need of more up-to-date apparatus and revision of codes. In connection with this it was shown that like the water department, the fire alarm system needs revision and addition, every year new alarm boxes and tappers have been installed but no addition to the power and arrangements of the general lines.

Insurance of town buildings was considered and the general sentiment was that it is not wise for the town to continue without insurance in substantial companies or by a system of regular appropriations to be carried as a sinking or reserve insurance fund.

The Board of Health through its chairman suggested the importance of doing something with swampy land or marshes in the neighborhood of congested settlement where they received drainage from near by houses, stables or factories.

All of these questions are being discussed in a conservative manner under the guiding mind and hand of A. P. Worthen president of the Planning Board.

Shaw, Fred Granger, Ralph Hollis, Miss May Hanley, violins; Frank Vender and Ralph Young, cornets; Frank Rand, clarinet; Howard Richards, traps, and Miss Marjorie Keith, piano.

At the conclusion of the singing of the chorus piece "March of the Toreadors," by the school, the presentation of the diplomas was held, and one by one the graduates of Weymouth High school, in the year 1914, stepped forward and received the certificate for which they have labored unceasingly during the past four years. The honor of presenting the precious documents this year, fell to the lot of Prince Tirrell. Mr. Tirrell made a short address, and then settled down to his task of presenting thirty-nine eager young ladies and young men with their certificate showing four years of hard work.

After the last diploma had been presented, came the singing of the class ode, an event of much interest each year. The ode this year was written by Miss Edith K. Newman of Weymouth Landing and the words are as follows:

Once more, O Lord, a milestone has been passed,
And on through life our footsteps tread at last;
Stay Thou beside us lest we oft should stray Far from Thy path, far from Thy path, away.
When, Heavenly Father, life's short journey done,
Thou hast our humble souls all reverent won,
Let us, O Lord, as sunset fades away,
Abide with Thee, abide with Thee for aye.

The benediction by Rev. Dr. Edward Torrey Ford of the East Weymouth Congregational church closed the program and then the audience and the undergraduates departed for their various homes, to partake of hurried suppers, in order to be back in time for the evening's festivities, while the class of 1914 strolled about the rooms of the school, discussing the events of the afternoon and those that were to come.

The class of 1914 numbers thirty-nine members, being six less than that of last year. The members are as follows:

Miss Gardner Baker, Marguerite Easton Beals, Eleanor Linwood Blanchard, Ethel Marion Cain, Winifred Loring Conant, Irene Cronin Donovan, James Henry Dwyer, Leo Bennett Fraher, Everett Burrell French, Mary Helen Gardner, Harold Cameron Gloster, Catherine Mary Hanley, Lillian Harlow, Kenneth Francis Holbrook, Edith Thompson Hollis, Ralph Sanford Hollis, Susie Alfrida Humphrey, Helen Beatrice Hunt, Dorothy Anna Meuse, Florence Elizabeth Murphy, Bertha Clapp Nash, Lucia Bradford Nash, Edith Kimball Newman, Grace Estelle Pierce, Ruth Frances Powers, Florence Dillingham Pray, Margaret Catherine Reddy, Russell Sullivan Reilly, John Emil Rosnell, Robert Raymond Ryan, Loring Vinson Tirrell, Susie Alice Trainor, Norman Augustus Walker, Clarence Parker Whittle, Edith Chandler Wilde, Clara Moran Wilder, George Ralph Young. Special certificates, Ruth Armored Blake, Charles Wheaton.

The officers of this year's class are: Harold C. Gloster, president; Leo B. Fraher, vice-president; Norman A. Walker, treasurer, and Miss Edith T. Hollis, secretary. These officers have boomed their class to the utmost and have made a most efficient board of officers in every way.

At five o'clock, after the pupils had recovered from the excitement of the afternoon's events, the line was formed for the march to the gymnasium, where a most delicious banquet had been prepared by Bates and Humphrey, East Weymouth's ever popular caterers.

The menu consisted of cold turkey, lobster and chicken salad, strawberries and cream, vanilla, chocolate, strawberry and tutti frutti ice cream, raspberry sherbert, rolls and coffee. The banquet was well served and as usual, was much enjoyed by the hungry group of teachers and students.

After the "inner man" had been amply appeased, the class president, Harold C. Gloster, called the meeting to order, and with a neat speech, introduced the class historian, Miss Florence Elizabeth Murphy. Miss Murphy gave a most complete and interesting paper on the history of the class of 1914, and then Miss Ruth Francis Powers and James H. Dwyer were called upon to prophesy the futures of the members of the class of '14. Both Mr. Dwyer and Miss Powers have fine imaginations and used them well, and it is safe to say that if all the members of this year's graduating class turned out as predicted yesterday afternoon, the 1914 class will eclipse any previous class by a large margin.

The committee in charge consisted of Miss Susie A. Humphrey, chairman; assisted by Miss Susie A. Trainor, Miss Eleanor Blanchard, J.H. Dwyer and Emil J. Rosnell.

After the prophesies had been completed and the predictions discussed and laughed over, preparations were begun for the evening's round of events. The members of the class who were to enact parts in the class play were "corralled behind the scenes, to 'make up' and prepare for the last grand presentation, while the other members of the class strolled about eagerly awaiting with keen anticipation, the final events in their final day as members of the Weymouth High school.

About seven o'clock, people began to arrive, in order to secure first class seats for the evening's entertainment, and for another hour the corps of ushers, consisting of Reginald W. Bates and Dwight Marden of the 1915 class, L. Tisdale and John Reis of the class of 1916, and G. Whittle and Samuel Langford of the 1917 class, were kept busy finding seats for the scores of people who flocked into the hall from both sides.

From seven forty-five until eight, the class reception was held. At a few minutes after eight, the class, with the class marshal in the lead, marched in and took seats in a special section, reserved for their use.

After the class became seated, the curtain arose for the opening of the class play, entitled "My Lord in Livery," a comedy in one act. The cast of characters follows:

Lord Thirlmere, (H.M.S. Phlegathon) Parker Whittle
Spiggott, (an old family butler) Emil Rosnell
Hopkins, (a footman) Harold Gloster
Robert, (a page) Russell Reilly
Sybil Amberley, (daughter of Sir George Amberley) Ethel Cain
Laura } her friends { Dorothy Meuse
Rose } Edith Newman
Mr. Whittle made a decided hit as Lord Thirlmere, while Emil Rosnell was a scream as the "old family butler." Harold C. Gloster as Hopkins, a footman, enacted his part well, as did Roberts, a page, in the person of Russell Reilly. Miss Ethel Cain as Sybil Amberley, daughter of Sir George Amberley, was clearly at ease in her part and her two friends, Laura and Rose, impersonated by Miss Dorothy Meuse and Miss Edith Newman, "made good" from the start. The sketch was highly applauded at the close, by a most appreciative audience.

At the close of the performance, the junior boys got busy and shortly had the floor cleared for the final event of the day, the annual dance of the graduating class. The dancing was in charge of the following committee: Norman A. Walker, chairman; Miss Florence E. Murphy, Miss Ruth F. Powers, Miss Edith K. Newman and Robert Ryan.

The annual grand march this year, was a very pretty affair indeed. President Harold C. Gloster with Miss Edith T. Hollis, led the march and they were followed by about two hundred couples. After the grand march, a well arranged order of twelve dances was begun. The floor was in charge of H. C. Gloster, assisted by Leo B. Fraher, Kenneth F. Holbrook, Russell Reilly and Clarence Parker Whittle.

During the intermission ice cream was served in room 9, by Mr. Beane and a corps of assistants.

Cuff's five piece orchestra furnished music for the dancing, and their up-to-date selections made a decided hit with all.

At midnight, the strains of "Home Sweet Home" filled the building, fond farewells were said and the merry gathering left for their various homes in special cars, autos, carriages and on foot, and once more the graduation exercises of Weymouth High school are a matter of history, and as a finale to the great and glorious graduation season, we wish each and every member of the class of 1914 the greatest success in coming years.

The Apple Of Ivory

Luck Came to an American Photographer in China

By JOTHAM KINGSLEY

Dick Hastings looked around at the threatening faces of the Chinese who had gathered about his peaceful little caravan.

Wung, his interpreter, stepped forward with manifest fear written on his round, flat face.

He chattered shrilly with the head man of the richly dressed band which had halted his progress through the beautiful scenic country watered by the upper Yangtze.

"What does he say?" broke in Dick impatiently.

The interpreter turned a frightened countenance toward his employer. He spoke rapidly in English.

"They are the servants of the ruler of this province—the great mandarin. Hep Foo. Hep Foo has found out that you have made devil pictures of the Sacred Chasm, and he has ordered his men to seize you."

"Where does he live?" asked Dick.

"At the end of that road, my lord. It is an hour's journey."

"Have you told these men that I have a permit from the Chinese government authorizing me to take photographs of the beautiful scenery in your country?"

"Yes, my lord, but they are afraid of the picture machine and the great Hep Foo has ordered you to be brought before him and"—Wung hesitated.

"And what—speak up, Wung!" ordered Dick impatiently.

"And if you are guilty you are to be beheaded at dawn tomorrow."

"Ah!" Dick thought intently for several moments.

"Lead the way, Wung," commanded Dick as he placed himself beside the coolie who was shouldering the heavy camera.

The mandarin, Hep Foo, sat in his audience chamber on a chair of carved ebony, enriched with ivory, and his feet, incased in yellow satin slippers, rested on a rich crimson silk cushion.

A bell rang somewhere in the palace, and instantly a servant parted the curtains of the doorway, approached the dais and knelt before the mandarin.

"My lord, the caravan of the foreign devil is here."

"I will give audience now," muttered Hep Foo.

Presently the doors were flung wide and almost instantly the audience chamber brightened with the brilliant colors of the fifty servants, who ranged themselves in a large semicircle before the dais. Within the semicircle were Dick Hastings, Wung, his interpreter of the numerous dialects of the country, and not the least important object, the costly camera.

Dick Hastings could understand the court language, and when Hep Foo foreigner to paint her portrait in the Imperial palace at Peking?"

"To satisfy the gods and to avenge my people the evil eye must go!" was his decision.

"Your excellency will make restitution, then?" Dick asked politely. "The camera is very valuable."

Hep Foo nodded. "Your servant, Wung, said it was valuable," smiled the mandarin faintly. "He said you pointed the evil eye at any object you wished; then you opened the devil machine and drew out a glass, with which you retired to a dark place lighted by a dim red lamp. He spied upon you once and saw you place the glass in water and then breathe upon the water, muttering as you did so, and as you breathed upon the glass the picture came out upon it clearly; thereupon Wung hastened to send me word of your wickedness against my people."

"As it is useless to try to convince your excellency that there is no magic about this picture taking, I can only repeat that you must make restitution for your ill treatment of me or else"—He hesitated and smiled confidently.

"Or else?"—snarled Hep Foo, with sudden and unexpected ferocity.

"I must remind your excellency that a few hundred li down the river American gunboats are anchored."

"Humph! What can your gunboats do to me?" scoffed the mandarin, who had never seen a gunboat in his monotonous life.

Dick smiled.

"They will force you to make restitution, or they will take you prisoner and carry you to Peking."

Hep Foo was silent for a long time. At last he lifted his head and barked a sharp order to his secretary. The man vanished at once, and a look of surprise and fear passed over the faces of the people.

Wung, the traitor servant of Dick, was evidently suffering with remorse at having betrayed his generous employer, for he moved slowly until he stood directly behind the American and muttered a few words in English that Dick barely caught before Wung glided back to his former position quite unnoticed by the Chinese who stood to a man with eyes glued on the door through which the secretary would return.

These are the words that Wung uttered:

"Take not the melon, for a deadly asp is hidden within; take not the orange, for it is poisoned; the pear and the plum will stifle you with noxious fumes, but the apple—it is safe to take the apple, my lord."

Dick would have laughed Wung's warning to scorn, for he had no reason to trust the man, but the servant's fear was evident, and the following incident convinced him that Wung's warning was sincere.

"What said you to the foreign devil?" asked Hep Foo of Wung.

"I was taunting him, my lord," lied Wung humbly.

"Dog! Be out of my presence!" thundered Hep Foo. And the unlucky Wung was dragged out and thrust through the gates to wander dejectedly where he might.

Then the secretary returned, and in his hands he bore a red lacquered tray, on which was piled fruit of most exquisite kind and form—a melon, a pear, a plum, an orange and a rosy apple. The secretary stood before Dick, and the young man looked closely at the fruit.

To his surprise it was carved from ivory, with delicate tinting cunningly laid on. The stems were of ebony and the leaves of polished jade.

"Choose," ordered Hep Foo—"choose foreign devil! And you must abide by whatever fate is allotted by your choice."

"In other words, be a sport," muttered Dick grimly. Then to the mandarin he said, "And if a kindly fate befalls me, excellency, I am assured of a safe departure from your domain?"

"I am Hep Foo, and my word is good," said the mandarin proudly.

Dick was muttering to himself:

"Not the melon nor the pear, plum or orange, but the rosy apple for mine. But I must keep 'em guessing for a minute."

So his hand poised uncertainly above the melon only to dart over to the orange and from that to the plum, then again to the tempting greenness of the melon and at last to alight surely on the ivory apple.

"This, excellency, is my choice," he declared.

A long sigh burst from the assembled Chinese, and with one accord they looked up into Hep Foo's baffled countenance.

"You are lucky—lucky," he muttered at last. "Take him away," added Hep Foo, impatient of the close scrutiny of his servants.

The secretary gave the tray of ivory fruit to an underling, kotoed to Hep Foo, and motioning to Dick Hastings, stalked toward the door.

Dick kotoed in the accepted manner and then arose and laid a hand on his precious camera.

Hep Foo leaned forward, a look of deadly hate upon his face.

"Is not enough that you have chosen my ivory apple?" he shrieked angrily. "Is it not the most precious of my possessions? Never before has it been chosen, and now—to lose it to a foreign devil!" He spat contemptuously. "Leave the devil machine here. It will be destroyed. The ivory apple is reward enough for any man, however greedy he may be."

Now a dozen Chinese leaped forward and pushed Dick out of the door, through a long corridor paved with marble into a stone courtyard, where the secretary awaited his coming.

"Come," said the man briefly. And Dick Hastings followed.

While he mourned the loss of the camera, which would put a stop to his expedition and stamp it a failure, he foreigner to paint her portrait in the Imperial palace at Peking?"

Now a dozen Chinese leaped forward and pushed Dick out of the door, through a long corridor paved with marble into a stone courtyard, where the secretary awaited his coming.

"Come," said the man briefly. And Dick Hastings followed.

While he mourned the loss of the camera, which would put a stop to his expedition and stamp it a failure, he puzzled over his future—if his employers dispensed with his services what was he to do? There was a girl back there in the United States who was waiting for him with a woman's indomitable faith in his ability to achieve success and return to her and the little home they had planned to build when they were married.

Suddenly the secretary broke the silence as they walked down the avenue of pines:

"Once the red lacquer tray was heaped high with fruit, and each fruit held a fate in its heart. Tradition says that many men have chosen the bunches of purple grapes and the different berries and the luscious peaches and the crimson hearted pomegranate, but this is the first time that one has chosen the ivory apple. The god of luck was with you."

"And why am I lucky in choosing merely a beautiful specimen of ivory?"

"CHOOSE," ORDERED HEP FOO. "CHOOSE, FOREIGN DEVIL!"

demanding Dick bitterly. "I have lost my camera and it is worth many hundreds of dollars. I am turned out into a strange and hostile country without food. How am I to get back to Shanghai?"

They had reached the gate at the end of the avenue now and the secretary paused and a smile chased across his inscrutable face and vanished as he turned away.

"I would have my lord consult the ivory apple," he said dryly. "Within is the answer to all the perplexities as well as the reason why he should consider this his lucky day."

The secretary padded softly back to the palace.

Dick felt the apple in his coat pocket and trudged on in the direction of the river. As he passed the place where he had been challenged by the mandarin's men he heard a rustling among the bamboos that fringed the road and then Wung stood before him, disheveled and ashamed to meet his master's eye.

But he held forth something in his hand that softened Dick's animosity and almost brought tears to that half-starved young man.

It was a blue bowl of steaming rice. "I begged it from a farmer," said Wung humbly. "Now that you have the ivory apple perhaps my lord will forgive me and hasten away from this spot. It would be like the great Hep Foo to repent and send some of his men forth as bandits and to capture the ivory apple. If my lord will condescend to look within it he will understand how lucky he is today! I have long heard of the ivory apple, but no one ever chose it before!"

Dick laughed. "My hunger is greater than my curiosity, Wung. After I have eaten we will look within the apple. Tell me, have you had anything to eat yourself?"

Wung nodded and smiled. "Another bowl of rice," he said.

In five minutes Dick had emptied the bowl and returned it to Wung, who vanished among the bamboos. When the interpreter had returned Dick arose and made ready to go on toward the river.

"The apple, my lord!" urged Wung anxiously. "Look within it now and remove the luck, then if you are captured they will take the apple, and you may keep what is within."

"Good advice," agreed Dick. And, stepping into the shadow of the trees, he held the ivory apple between his hands and twisted the fruit sharply. It fell in two halves. In one half was the perfect reproduction of an apple's core, even to the ebony seeds. In the other half was a deep hollow, and in the hollow reposed the largest emerald Dick Hastings had ever seen.

"It is a great fortune," breathed Wung excitedly. "Some call it the 'little green apple.' It belonged to Hep Foo's father. It is Hep Foo's favorite game to make an enemy choose among the fruit, and more often they pick out the melon, with the deadly asp in its heart, or the poisoned orange. But the apple has always been untouched until today. Let us go on, my lord. Hep Foo may follow."

A month later Dick Hastings arrived in Shanghai ragged, unkempt and quite disreputable looking, but next to his heart there was hidden the emerald that meant happiness for him and the girl he loved, and the little home in California would be more perfect than they had dared to dream. And Wung, suitably rewarded by Dick Hastings, does not dare leave Shanghai or its environments for fear of the vengeance of Hep Foo.

The Stolen Brooch

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Though women have gained in the past half century in independence, they have lost in that chivalrous treatment by men that was formerly prevalent.

In 1850, at a dinner party in Charleston, S. C., a lady missed a brooch of considerable value. She was very much frightened for fear it had been stolen and lost her equanimity. The host, a Mr. Du Bois, was much put out about the affair, declaring that she must have dropped the brooch. Nevertheless a search failed to produce it. Then Du Bois said:

"This is a very serious matter for all of us, for me as host especially, for it seems to implicate me in having a thief among my friends. It must be thrashed out here before we separate. Will some one kindly suggest a method of investigation?"

"I propose," said a gentleman present, "that we all voluntarily submit to be searched."

Du Bois asked each guest in turn if he or she would assent to the proposition, and all expressed themselves as quite willing to do so till he came to Edwin Porcher, a gentleman of Savannah, Ga., who was visiting Charleston. "Why do you decline to do your part at getting to the bottom of this matter?" asked the host.

"I decline to answer."

There was a constrained silence for some time, when Du Bois, who was much excited, said:

"My friends, I must crave your pardon for introducing this man among you. I had no idea he was a thief."

All looked at Porcher, wondering how he would receive the word "thief." He was unflinching. All rose from the table, and Porcher, bowing formally, left the room. Those who remained discussed the matter, asking Du Bois about how he came to be acquainted with Porcher, for the latter, not being a resident of Charleston, had not been known to the guests till introduced by their host. Du Bois explained that he had met Porcher at his club, at which the latter had been put up as a guest by a member. Porcher appeared to be a gentleman. Du Bois, desiring to be courteous to a stranger, had invited him to dinner.

The party were about to break up when a negro servant handed the host a note. Tearing it open, he read it, knitted his brows, then put it in his pocket without making any reference to it. But every one present divined that it had something to do with the disagreeable affair that had happened during the evening.

While the guests were bidding the host adieu he asked one of them, a Mr. Fitz Hugh, to remain after the others had departed. As soon as the two men were alone Du Bois handed his friend the note he had received. It ran thus:

Having been invited to your house and called a thief because I did not assent to the method proposed of clearing up the matter of the loss of the brooch, it seems to me that as a gentleman—which I claim to be—it is my privilege to demand satisfaction from you for the insult offered me at your own table and in the presence of your guests. I would be glad to accept an apology if an apology would exonerate me, but it would not. The only approach I can make to exculpating myself is by the code. A common thief would not likely be so sensitive to his honor as to risk his life for it. Will you please refer me to a friend?

Du Bois and the man to whom he showed the letter consulted for an hour. Fitz Hugh held that Du Bois had not the right to call his guest a thief simply because he would not consent to be searched. But since Porcher had called attention to the fact that an apology would not remove the evidence, such as it was, that he had stolen the brooch, there would be no use in offering one. Under the circumstances there seemed no way open but to accept the challenge, though Fitz Hugh maintained that Porcher's refusal to be searched placed him in the position of a thief, and a gentleman was not called upon under the code to fight such a person. Du Bois was not compelled to notice the challenge; but, on the other hand, Porcher had not been convicted of the stealing, and Du Bois felt that he was entitled to satisfaction. Fitz Hugh met a friend of Porcher's, and the terms were arranged—that the principals should meet the next morning at sunrise.

Now, the real thief, a woman, had observed the results of her action and when Porcher's note came felt sure it was a challenge. After a bitter struggle with her better nature, at 2 o'clock in the morning and but a few hours before the time appointed for the duel she drove up to where Porcher was staying and asked to see him.

"I have come to confess," she said. "The brooch became unfastened from the owner's dress and dropped into a fold of mine. I saw it fall. A duel is to take place between you and Mr. Du Bois. I don't know it, but I am quite sure of it. Now that I have confessed, surely this cannot be necessary."

Porcher thought for awhile, then said: "All you have to do is to say that the brooch dropped into a fold of your dress. Nothing more is necessary."

The lady drove at once to Du Bois' house, called him up and acted upon Porcher's advice. Du Bois went himself to apologize to Porcher, and every one of the guests at the dinner showed him some attention. But the only person who knew that he had taken the obliquity on himself rather than expose a woman was the thief.

SOLAR ENERGY.

Its Constant Radiation Is Lessening the Mass of Our Sun.

The work of Einstein on the principle of relativity shows that a body which radiates energy loses a portion of its mass depending on the energy radiated. It follows that the sun, which continually radiates energy, is constantly losing mass. M. J. Bosler has calculated that the sun loses a mass equal to that of our earth in 30,000,000 years.

If it be assumed that the mass thus lost is gravitational mass it follows that the length of the year increases by six seconds in 1,000,000 years and that in the same time the mean longitude of the earth is affected in such a way as to produce a variation of one-tenth of a year—that is, a retardation of thirty-six days in the seasons.

Such variations are too minute to be observable. In stellar systems possessing a higher temperature the effect would be much more marked, for the energy radiated by a body varies as the fourth power of its absolute temperature.

If, as M. Nordmann believes, there exist stars having a temperature six or seven times that of our sun their radiation is one or two thousand times as intense. Thus, if the temperature of Algor is 13,800 degrees, it is calculated that at the end of 2,000 years the eclipses of Algor suffer a retardation of about twelve minutes.—Boston Herald.

RULE OF THE GLOVE.

Queer Custom of Suspending the Law in an English Town.

By reason of a curious custom the people of the old town of Honiton, in Devonshire, England, are exempt from arrest from dawn to sunset of a certain day of the year. It is while the horse fair there is in progress that the law is thus suspended for awhile. The custom is a survival of a quaint and picturesque ceremonial dating from the days of King Henry III.

At the beginning of the fair the town crier, in the gorgeous dress of a bundle of the old days, appears upon the scene with a pole to the end of which is attached a large gilt glove decked with flowers. Having rung his handbell three times, the crier announces: "Oyez, oyez, oyez! The fair is begun. The glove is up; no man may be arrested until the glove is down. God save the king!"

Each sentence is chorused by the children standing round, and at the conclusion they scramble for nuts. The glove is taken down at sunset.—St. Louis Republic.

Mme. Adam and the Crinolines.

Mme. Adam has been confiding to an interviewer that she owed her introduction to journalism to the fact that she did not wear a crinoline at the time when fashion decreed the garment. Alphonse Karr, who objected to the crinolines, had been denouncing them in his journal, but had concluded his denunciation with the sentence, "Still, there is not a pretty woman in France who does not wear one." Whereupon Mme. Adam, who was then Mlle. Lambert, took up her pen and wrote: "Mr. Editor—One may be pretty—some people even say that I am beautiful—and yet one may abstain from crinolines." And she went on to develop the thesis. She developed it so wittily that Alphonse Karr printed it in Le Siecle and that was her first contribution to the periodical press of which she has since been one of the pillars.—Westminster Gazette.

Women and Tipping.

That women are close fitted when it comes to tipping is the consensus of opinion of all waiters. "I was on duty in the pen—the upstairs room where women are served—all last week," said a waitress in one of the popular priced restaurants, "and I hardly saw a nickel from one week's end to the other. They never give you anything, but I thought the limit was reached when I saw a well dressed woman deliberately pick up a dime which a young man, invigiled up there by his feminine companion, had left on the table for me. I wasn't bashful about telling her that it was mine, and she handed it over without a word—but it just shows you one of their lovely little ways."—New York Tribune.

The Devil's Kneel.

Among the famous bells of Dewsbury, Yorkshire, England, is one known as "Black Tom of Soothill," which was presented to the church in explanation of a murder. "Black Tom" is always rung on Christmas eve. Its solemn tolling as it strikes the first tap at exactly midnight is known all over Yorkshire as the "devil's kneel," it being the notion that when Christ was born the devil died.—London Standard.

"He can't help his looks."

Most people fancy themselves innocent of those crimes of which they cannot be convicted.—Seneca.

Reed Streets, 5. Weymouth A. C. 2.

At the Weymouth Fair Grounds in South Weymouth, Saturday afternoon the Reed Street nine of Rockland defeated the Weymouth A. C. 5 to 2.

Callahan for Weymouth picked a good game, but the inability of his team-mates to get hits at the right time was the main cause of defeat. While the visitors by timely hitting, especially with men on bases enabled them to score three runs in the first inning and two in the ninth.

Both teams fielded cleverly, many fast plays being made. Catches by Pickett and Howe were features.

All Her Fault.

"There goes Bertha, the innkeeper's pretty daughter. She's broken many hearts, mine among them."
"Yes; my red nose lies on her conscience too."—Flegende Blatter.

Reasonable Enough.

"What's your objection to the farm, mister?"
"The land appears to be sunken."
"But that's owing to the heavy crops."—Washington Herald.

C. M. A. SCORES SHUT OUT.

Bob Gill, Boston College High Star Lets U. S. S. Rhode Island Down With Four Hits Last Saturday. Score 5 to 0.

With Bob Gill, the crack Boston College high school pitcher, twirling masterly ball the C. M. A. nine shut out the U. S. S. Rhode Island nine on the C. M. A. field last Saturday afternoon 5 to 0. The C. M. A. boys fielded well behind Gill and also came through with hits where they were needed. Gill fanned ten.

Only one man reached third base on the battefield nine and but two saw the key-stone sack. The home nine started scoring in the second inning. With one down Drinkwater singled and stole. He advanced to third on Wall's out and scored on Vender's single.

In the third the C. M. A. aggregation added another run to their list. Bates, first man up, singled and stole second. Gorman came to time with a two bagger down the third base line and Bates scored.

There was no more scoring until the eighth when Clapp got three more. Wall passed up a fine chance to score in the fourth, when he failed to touch first base on a drive that was good for a triple. In the eighth, Earl Bates got on, on an error by Harris. He stole second. Gorman singled scoring Bates. "Hope" stole second and scored on Reilly's screeching single. "Russ" stole second easily and went to third on Gill's out at first. Drinkwater singled and Reilly tallied the final run of the game. The features of the game were contributed by Gill, Reilly, Wall and Gorman for the winners and by Halftown and Burnett for the U. S. S. Rhode Island.

The battefield lads were accompanied by about fifty rooters and their band and a fine concert was given interspersed with some decidedly original "rooting" by the navy boys. A large crowd was out for the game. The score:

Will Join the Celebration.

Mrs. J. W. Linnahan of Front street, who, before marriage, was Miss Minnie Smith of Portland, Maine, is arranging to take part in the tercentenary celebration of the Smith family of Maine, which will take place next month, on the picturesque island of Monhegan, off the Maine coast. It was just three centuries ago, in 1614, that John Smith of Virginia and Pocahontas fame, sailed north, along the coast of New England, and not only gave this part of America the name of New England, but drew the first map of its coast while exploring from Cape Cod to Penobscot Bay, he made the island of Monhegan his headquarters, where it is said one of his sons remained and settled, hence the reason of this tercentenary celebration of his descendants.

Issues of the Fall Campaign
About Ready For Discussion

ANALYZED BY THE GOVERNOR

Executive Preparing to Combat Argument to Be Made Against Him on the Stump—Will Own Up to Many Conferences With Members of Legislature—Other Strong Points

The close of the legislature is now in sight and the issues of the fall campaign are right at hand. Governor Walsh, who expects again to be the standard bearer of his party, is analyzing the arguments which are to be made against him on the stump. The governor says that he believes the Republicans will call him a theoretical governor because he has pointed out what he considers to be the need of reorganizing the state administrative boards. In addition to this he thinks that he will be charged with having taken too great an interest in the actions of the legislators, rather than waiting until legislation came to him for his executive approval. He has also heard that he will be held responsible for the signing of appropriation bills which he might have vetoed. He anticipates particularly being attacked for having signed certain measures which bear a referendum.

The most noteworthy of referendum measures is the Boston district council bill over which the governor and Mayor Curley are in a wide open split. But the governor says that he sees nothing to regret in his action, inasmuch as the people of Boston will be given the right to say whether they want a change from the present form of government to the district council form.

The fact that this is the bill in which Martin Lomasney was particularly interested, and that the mayor and the charter guards opposed, suggest that the opponents of the governor will make war 8 the pivot of this particular feature.

As to the matter of appropriation bills the governor says that he has been in constant touch with the ways and means committees on both branches of the legislature and that they have been in substantial agreement.

In regard to legislative interference the governor will own up to many conferences with members of the legislature and will simply rest by saying that it is by conference that legislative business is expedited.

Most of the governor's reorganization reforms did not get enacted into law, but neither do most of the recommendations of any governor and he does not fear criticism on this point.

Of course the railroad question may divide the parties as it always has. But the governor's position upon this has not been inflexible. His suggestions were not accepted and he said that he would support the bill which has been before the general court.

The railroad developments are such that it will be a week after the close of the legislature before anybody can lay down the lines along which this issue will be drawn.

Saving the Port Board?
There is something humorous in the fear that seems to grow everywhere lest some member of the legislature be appointed upon some place created under act of that body. It was only natural, therefore, that there should appear at the end of the bill reorganizing the port directors a clause stating that no member of the legislature should be eligible.

Representative Tague of Charlestown was once mentioned for such a place, although Tague has his eye on the congressional nomination in the Tenth district. Senator Horgan of Roxbury is another man mentioned, but he also is thinking over the congressional situation in the Eleventh district. Somebody said that if Bagley, the East Boston senator, were appointed, the East Boston district would go Democratic and there might be a chance of controlling his seat and perhaps the senate if other districts went bad.

Out of all the political gossip said to proceed from the "inside" it is anybody's guess why this case was taken to place a clause of exclusion in the port act.

Commissioners Conry and McNary are to remain upon the board as changed from five to three, so that there is one place in the gift of the governor. One thing is sure, it will not go to Hugh Bancroft, the present chairman, because he is not a candidate for it.

That Recess Committee.
The proposal for a recess committee to sit upon the Massachusetts railroad situation did not get very far, and there were no particularly strong illusions in the minds of the men who were accredited with the idea that it would.

Probably a recess committee would not be absolutely useless. It would give a few months more for a working out of the railroad situation, not by the committee, but by the attorneys and railroad men. But President Coolidge of the senate remarked that the scheme did not sound like a winder to him. And Walter McLane, whose name was hitched to the recess resolve, never had any idea that it would go through. But the resolve did have the effect of driving various parties to some tangible measure and it was valuable for that reason.

Walsh Is Pruning
Governor Walsh remains firm in his contention that the state tax will not exceed $10,500,000. Others promise that upon the last day of the session the amount will be $11,000,000.

The governor in his last conference with the members of the house ways and means committee remarked to Representative White of Newton that the knife would have to go in hard, and, therefore, every appropriation bill for several days has been trimmed down to the last margin and there are couple of hundred thousand dollars leeway yet before the $10,500,000 limit is reached.

A Curious Reversal
It is a curious reversal of the old order of things to find in office an entire Democratic set of office holders preparing to run again, while the Republican slate is not made up and does not seem likely to be for some time to come.

It will be Walsh for governor, Barry for lieutenant governor, Donahue for secretary of state, Mansfield for treasurer, Pope for auditor, Hoynton for attorney general. On the Republican side it is McCall for governor, Cavanagh or Goetting for lieutenant governor, perhaps Kinney for secretary of state, Stevens or Burrill or Kane or Ward for treasurer and Haines or somebody else for attorney general. The Progressives have Mr. Bird and would like to have him run for every office on the ticket if it were possible.

In the old days the Republican ticket was known for sometimes six months in advance, and sometimes for years. Contests were rare and were quickly settled when a few men came together.

A Queer Combination
A combination of George W. Anderson, Senator Edward Fisher and Robert Washburn has given the railroad bill to the legislature in its present form. No three men could be found more dissimilar in their make-up. Anderson and Governor Walsh have been at work together upon the railroads and it is Anderson who is said to have advised the governor to get behind the new bill and put the suggestions of his message aside.

Anderson, while a valuable student of railroads, is so irascible as to win from the brilliant Washburn the title of "Boils." Fisher is the conservative and has no especial knowledge of the railroad situation. Washburn is just brilliant.

Their session, if reported, would make rather an interesting story, particularly for the stockholders of the poor Boston and Maine.

Poor Commission Chairman
The suggestion of the name of Norman White for chairman of the commission on economy and efficiency when reorganized has not stirred Governor Walsh to any great depth of feeling. White, moreover, would rather be out in politics than serving upon the board of, which he was formerly chairman.

It is a pretty good guess that the days of the board as an active political force are over. Under John Cole the most exhaustive report obtainable upon conditions in the state institutions boards was made. Cole has made a valuable contribution to the studies of state administration. It told too much and aroused too much opposition to be of sweeping practical value. Moreover, opposition to the report has become centered upon the idea of having such a board. The new chairman will not be dangerous.

Calling Early
Requests for nomination papers are pouring in at the office of the secretary of the commonwealth, but they will not be ready for several weeks yet.

The early political callers herald a busy election. With the legislature doing business up to July, the gap between the beginning and the close is a narrow one.

Before the end of July hot weather politics will be sizzling and a few weeks later a real campaign will be on again.

Politicians all over the country will regard Massachusetts with attention as an index of the national situation. And this will be more true if the policies of the Wilson administration become involved here.

Cross Is Candid
Representative Cross of Royalston is a teacher by profession and is quite candid about the relations of his calling with the civil service laws. He does not believe that the tenure of office of a teacher ought to be determined by the rules which apply to other branches of public employment where there can be no removal except upon a hearing of charges made.

Attack on Counties
The day is not distant when a general attack is to be made upon our present system of county government. It was due this year but for several reasons the fight did not break. One was the power of a few of the boards of county commissioners.

Representative Bothfield of Newton, however, the other day in a discussion of the matter showed where the struggle is coming, perhaps in the coming legislature. Already the direct nomination system has made a profound change in the system of choosing county officers. The next step will be in the abolition of certain features of the fee system, the making of several of the officers appointive and the placing of the county administration more under the state.

FOR HOW LONG?

Weymouth Raises a Pertinent Question.

When a neighbor tells us that he has recovered from a serious illness, the first question that naturally arises is, "How long will he keep well?" Temporary relief is one thing, but a lasting cure is altogether different. There is nothing temporary about the work of Doan's Kidney Pills, as the following Weymouth evidence proves beyond a doubt.

Mrs. O. W. Binney, 17 Norfolk street, Weymouth, Mass., says: "My kidneys were very weak. The action was irregular and the kidney secretions were unnatural. My back ached and I was often nervous. I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and began using them. They made me well."

A SECOND STATEMENT.

When Mrs. Binney was interviewed on July 11, 1913, she said: "I have had no symptoms of kidney complaint since Doan's Kidney Pills made a cure in my case some years ago. I gladly confirm the statement I gave then, praising this remedy."

THE IDEAL JURYMAN.

His Age and Qualifications From an English Point of View.

There is a general agreement in London legal circles that the best juryman are to be found among men sixty years of age. The opinion is that juryman at that age show better judgment than younger men.

A leading London barrister, asked for his opinion, said: "I prefer men about fifty years of age. A defending barrister in, say, a criminal case which has certain sentimental elements will always welcome a young jury. He knows he can touch their emotions far more easily than he can those of men over fifty. Sentiment is very rare at fifty, and a man is cold and purely logical. The average man who has reached the age of fifty looks upon things from a materialistic point of view, and his judgment is therefore unaffected by sentiment."

"Education, save in certain civil cases, is no great asset to a juryman. The bricklayer or the mechanic has just as much knowledge of human nature and a sense of justice as the professor, and in many respects barristers and judges prefer the unlettered juryman to the man of culture, though in the case of the latter he is less susceptible to an emotional plea. The man with sound common sense, learned not from books, but from everyday life, is not so easily led either by judge or counsel as many suppose, and if you add the wisdom of years you get the ideal juryman."—Exchange.

FORCED THEM TO FIGHT.

How "Honor" Was Satisfied by a Compulsory Duel in Hungary.

The code duello as insisted upon abroad is strikingly illustrated by the story of a happening at Budapest, Hungary. It appears that a lawyer, Babocsay by name, quarreled with his wife over a new hat. The wife called her brother, Lieutenant Hajdu, a military aviator, to her aid. The husband used words deemed insulting by Hajdu. This coming to the hearing of Hajdu's superior officer, the latter ordered the lieutenant to fight a duel with Babocsay. Neither party wished to fight. Babocsay offered to apologize, and Hajdu was willing to accept the apology and thus end the affair.

But the military martinet was inexorable. The duel must be fought to satisfy the honor of the army. Consequently these two men, closely related, were compelled to attempt to try to take each other's life. They met, Babocsay, firing aimlessly, nevertheless sent a bullet through the lung of his adversary, and Lieutenant Hajdu died of his wound.

Upon hearing of the death of her brother at the hand of her husband in her quarrel Mme. Babocsay went insane, twice attempted suicide and was finally confined to an asylum.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Avoid Fretting.

The moment I fret about a thing I am its slave instead of its master. And there is no slave-master in the world like worry. Another master may grudge the dinner hour, but he must give you time for sleep. Another master may grudge the dinner hour, but some time you must eat. But worry will work you twenty-four hours a day and spoil your appetite into the bargain.—Mark Guy Pearse.

Chill Poor Country for Stock.

Stock raising in Chili does not seem to be keeping pace with the general development of the country, owing to the fact that better use can be made of the land, since beef cattle can be brought from Argentina cheaply. Then the ravages of tuberculosis, carbuncles, fever, etc., and the large number of deaths during droughts in unirrigated sections of the country tend to make the business unprofitable.

Establishing Public Right-of-Way.

In order to establish a public right-of-way over a new road at Hershman, Surrey, England, a bridal party recently walked through it. In olden times it was customary when making such a claim to carry a dead body through the road.

A Vindication

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

When I arrived at my aunt's country place to make her a visit I found the family much put out about something which had occurred. Ralph Townsend, who had been paying attention to my Cousin Bess, had gone away under a cloud, and my aunt said that it was fortunate he had been found out before it was too late. Bess was in a perpetual state of tears, and the prospects for my having a pleasant visit were very poor.

In time I learned what the trouble was. A gold watch belonging to my Cousin John and other articles belonging to various members of the family were missing. One of them—a brooch—had been found in the pocket of Ralph's dress coat hanging in the closet of his bedroom. When informed of the fact, without making any defense he put his belongings into his suit case and left the house.

I possess one faculty which is more common to my sex than to men, I think. I judge persons, instinctively. Besides, we women can see through one another far better than men can see through us. There was a girl in the house, a general friend of the family, Edna Pettit, whom I did not like. I could give no reason for my dislike, but it was just as strong as if I could give a thousand. On the other hand, I had met Ralph Townsend once, and, although I had not exchanged a word with him, I had been very favorably impressed with him.

Perhaps this antipathy and this liking would not be considered evidence in a court of law, but it was good enough for me. I argued that something had been going on between Edna and Ralph; that Ralph had incurred her hatred, and she had taken revenge upon him by purloining certain articles and putting one of them in his pocket. He was too much of a man to attack a woman. He couldn't prove anything against her anyway, and there was nothing to do but to go away without making a defense. I believed that he knew whence came the stigma that had been fastened upon him.

I flatter myself that for reasoning based entirely on feeling the above is pretty good. I don't know any man who could do better. Having fixed upon the guilty one—in my own mind—I laid my plans to expose her. But, though feeling might have led me in the right direction, it is not reliable in a demonstration. Nevertheless I put myself in Edna's place and thought what I would do if I had played the game I believed she had played. I felt sure that I would not hide any of the stolen articles in my own room. I thought it improbable that they would be found in the room of any one else, since if they were stolen to ruin Ralph there would probably be no reason to ruin any other person.

My aunt's house was a large one with a good many bedrooms. During my visit three rooms remained unoccupied. Two were on the floor where women guests were lodged and one where men slept. It occurred to me that the missing articles, if in the house, would be hidden in one of these vacant rooms. On the night of my arrival I began to make investigations. After midnight I stole into one of the unoccupied women's rooms with an electric lamp and made a thorough search, looking especially between the mattresses of the bed. I found nothing.

The next night I visited the other vacant room in the women's quarters with the same result. There was a sofa near a window, and the night being hot, I lay down on the lounge to think. I lay scarcely done so when I heard a ticking.

Rising, I examined the lounge, but could not see how a watch could have got inside of it. I lay down again, and presently it occurred to me that the lounge was constructed to open and shut. Getting up again, I felt it till I found that I could lift the part on which I had been lying. Inside by the light of my lamp I found the watch I had heard. I recognized it as my aunt's. In a small box I found other missing articles.

Now that I had found the stolen property it remained for me to find the thief. I concentrated my attention upon Edna Pettit. I had no idea what she would do in the matter, whether she would suffer the articles to remain where they were or take them away. Every night I went from my room to the one where I had found the stolen goods and slept—when I did sleep—very comfortably on some blankets under the bed, first satisfying myself that the articles were still under the lounge.

The night before Edna was to take her departure while sleeping under the bed I was awakened by some one coming into the room. I didn't know who it was, but, stealing from my hiding place, I looked the door. Then, flashing my electric lamp about, I struck the object of my suspicions. By promising no public exposure, provided she would sign a confession, I relieved Ralph Townsend from all blame. We found a desk with some paper and pencils and I took the confession before I would permit her to leave the room. I asked her if she had come there to take away the property and she said she had determined that the best thing she could do was to leave it there, but had come for one article she coveted for herself.

The next morning she left without her hosts knowing about my discovery. When I told them it brought great astonishment to all and great joy to Bess. Ralph Townsend was sent for at once and returned that evening.

ON THE FARM

Read this column and you can have it delivered at your house with something new every week for a full year by sending $2.00 to this office now.

It is better to salt the cows every day. Two to three ounces to each cow is enough.

Remove the harness and heavy collars from the horses during the noon hour. You will note the difference in their work in the afternoon.

One hundred and fifty eggs a year is what an average well cared for pullet should produce.

It is not a good plan to pasture the orchard with large animals. Hogs may entirely ruin a young orchard within a few days. Poultry and right young calves are about the only animals that can safely be pastured among fruit trees.

Do not try to dry the calf by rubbing it with hay or straw. Allow the cow to dry it with her rough, warm tongue. She likes to do it, and it is nature's way.

The man who comes to your dairy farm and wants to buy the helpers from the best cows is not always your best friend. Be careful before you sell them to him. It is going backwards in the dairy industry to let these go.

The farm is the ideal place for chickens, and the foundation upon which all successful poultry operations rest is constitutional vigor. Without a high degree of health it is utterly impossible to progress in poultry work. Such being the case, nowhere are conditions so conducive to poultry success as they are on the farm.

Where ground is to be plowed for a summer or early fall crop, cut a narrow furrow but plow deep. Shallow plowing will not do for midsummer working. The ground must be broken deeply to form a deep and moist seed bed.

Since common weeds are not directly useful plants and cannot be grown for food, feed and other useful purposes, we cannot tolerate them with our cultivated crops. A weedy cultivated crop usually indicates a careless or an ignorant farmer.

Experiments have shown that the immediate and thorough cooling of fresh milk or cream greatly retards souring and the development of objectionable flavors which are in a large measure responsible for the poor quality of butter made in creameries throughout the country.

No greater mistake can be made than to assume that the season will determine the yield of crops regardless of the cultivation given. Such assumption is false. The season will be a great factor in determining the yield, but cultivation will also be a factor. Cultivation may be the means of overcoming some of the faults of a poor season or it may be the means of helping a favorable season.

It is a notable fact that a majority of our farming is done too hurriedly and carelessly. Most plowmen set their aim for a wide furrow, to cover a large area each day. They consider horizontal distance covered in a given time of more importance than vertical distance. Extra time spent in plowing deep and well, will give better results in crop growth than extra time spent in cultivation.

When first turning a horse on pasture after they have been on dry feed for some time, they should never be turned out early in the morning when the dew is on the grass, and should not for several days be allowed to stay in the pasture until they have had all they want. There is always danger of colic under such circumstances.

In some cases weeds will come in the lawn in spite of the best efforts to keep them out. One way to kill them or reduce their numbers is to mow the lawn frequently in spring and early summer. This will kill or reduce the annual weeds, which have but one season of growth. Perennial weeds, however, which live on in the ground from year to year, cannot be killed by being cut off at the top, as their roots and crown buds will live on. This kind must be killed by being dug out by the roots, or all the crown buds cut off low down.

For the beginner to start out on a large scale, on ideas foreign to those who are successful in poultry, dooms him to failure from the start. Follow the beaten path of success—there are many such in every state in the Union—start modestly, and, as experience comes, gradually increase the flock. Two hundred fowls well handled will give a good profit. Later, 200 more, given the same care, can be made as profitable; then 200 or 300 can be added until the beginner has a flock that is a money maker.

SUBMARINE CRAFT

They Surpass All Warships In Concentrated Deadly Power.

A DIVE UNDER THE SURFACE.

The Terrifying Sensation and the Agony of Roaring Noises That Bewilder the Novice as the Vessel Goes Down into the Depths of the Sea.

In waters where the United States maintains a naval station you may happen to see a tall staff cutting through the water as though borne by some unseen hand beneath the surface. On the top of the staff is a slight bent hood pointed in the direction of motion. This is the eye of a submarine.

From the lens in the front of the hood a picture of the whole seascape is carried down by a succession of mirrors in the hollow staff until it is thrown on a prismatic lens at the bottom. Here the navigator of the submarine watches a moving picture of what is going on above the surface of the water and guides his boat accordingly.

We said boat advisedly, because it is really a vessel for the transportation of human beings at sea. It is, moreover, more than a floating craft, swimming on the surface like a swan. It is also a diver, darting down into the depths like a fish.

Let yourself be shut up in it and dive with it and it seems more like a tightly corked bottle. Your first sensation as the boat starts downward is that you have foolishly allowed yourself to be shut up in a death trap from which there is no escape. Your heart sinks faster than the boat.

And then something happens to make you forget everything but that this craft is a hellish contrivance for destroying your hearing. As the submarine dips under the surface and all outlet for sound is cut off by the sealing waters the rush of the sea around the steel walls becomes the rattle of spring hall on a tin roof. You remember that old and painful swimming hole experiment when you held your head under water and let a playmate strike two stones together. But here the assault on your eardrums is as though a million stones were striking together. A pebble falling through the waters on the steel hull sets the inside clanging like a Chinese temple full of jangling gongs. You must shout to be heard.

Through the roar from the vibrations of the steel shell come the insistent crackling hum of electric motors, the rattling fire of gasoline engines, the whirl of machinery and the barking cough of exhausts. Your craft seems to be nothing but an elliptical mass of concentrated noise sinking through the sea. You fear that it will blow up from its own vibrations.

When you have in a measure controlled your protesting ears you look around and see a wonderful array of engines, machinery, deadly torpedoes lashed together in pairs and the steel tubes from which they are projected with compressed air all stowed away in the least possible space.

The double walls surrounding you are themselves huge ballast tanks, which can be filled with water through valves opening into the sea outside or can be emptied by the force of compressed air from within. As these tanks are filled the hull of the submarine sinks until only the periscope, the elevated eye of the vessel, shows above the water. When the water is forced out of them the boat becomes light and rises to the surface until its conning tower, superstructure and the upper part of the hull are exposed. Then the craft is navigated like any other boat.

When the vessel is submerged the navigator at the lower end of the periscope has a far more intricate task than the steering of an ordinary boat. The periscope, of course, brings him a limited view of the sea about. Then he must steer in two planes instead of one. His craft turns not only to the right or left, but also up or down.

To enable the vessel to stay under the water a longer time than usual the submarine carries a reserve supply of air. This emergency supply is compressed in a steel flask under the enormous pressure of 2,000 pounds to the square inch. Should the flask burst the explosion would wreck the boat. Perhaps a better idea of the tremendous concentration implied by this pressure may be gained from the statement that if this storage cylinder were punctured with a hole no bigger than a needle and if the tiny jet of escaping air were to strike a man it would pierce him through and through like a bullet and even drive a hole through an inch thick board behind him.

For ordinary purposes the air supply used under water is carried in ordinary cylinders at much smaller pressures. Unusual precautions have to be taken to prevent the contamination of the air supply by gases from the storage batteries and from the gasoline motors.

Concentration epitomizes the submarine. Its energies and utilities are packed in like the parts of a puzzle, and in the concentration of deadly power it surpasses any other weapon of man.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Passion is out of place in any discussion and more than ever in a right cause, for it befores and bemuddles it.—Gogol panied with the name of the writer, and unpublished communications cannot be

The Legislature of Massachusetts drags itself along in trying to earn the $1000 voted to its members. It is however enacting many important measures. Yes: terday the house voted that a member could sit in its sessions without stockings on but he must wear a coat of some kind.

The calamity at Salem yesterday which wiped out millions of dollars worth of valuable property by fire and also destroyed valuable antiquities which can never be replaced is one more warning to Weymouth and that special town meeting and more fire fighting apparatus can not come any too soon.

The June roses are fast passing away and soon we will listen to the old song
"The Last Rose of Summer" but while June roses are in profusion their usual accompaniment, Wedding Bells, seem to be far short of normal. True there have been some very pretty nuptial events which forebode happy futures for the parties interested but such events are far short of the average for June.

Thirty nine was the number graduated from our High school last week, twenty five girls and fourteen boys. Thirty nine boys and girls who now represent about $15,000 of tax payers' money of Weymouth.
We are not raising the question does it pay, as people can spend money for no more noble purpose than that of education. The question is, what is now the aim of these 39 graduates, have they "hitched their wagon to a star" and will supplement their school life with a definite object in view of higher attainments place their names among those of the great benefactors of mankind or will a few years see them sink into oblivion as the world moves and they not a factor in its improvement.

Dorothea L. Dix Tent, D. of V.

Patriotic Instructor Miss Mabel C. Mc-Cue, has presented Mary Keith, grade 4,
Jefferson school, Catherine Carroll, grade 3, Jefferson school and Frank Claris, 4th grade, Washington school, with silk flags for best essays on "The Flag." She also presented 400 small flags to grades one and two in East Weymouth.

Tuesday, June 23rd, thirty of the members of Tent 32, visited the Soldiers' Home in Chelsea. A fine entertainment was given the comrades, and refreshments were served all comrades. The Adjutant of the Home presented all with a souvenir, which created much merriment.

July 2nd, Tent 32 will exemplify the work for Brockton and Quincy Tents.
All comrades and brothers of Camp 36 will be welcome.

To Pick Up Glass.

Instead of picking up pieces of broken glass, wet a woolen cloth, lay on the floor over the fragments and pat lightly. The tiny particles will stick to the cloth, which may be burned.

Had Seen Better Days.

Wearie William (crawling into a drain pipe for a night's rest)—"This ain't quite so warm as a barn." Mouldy Mike (crawling into another)—"No, but there's more room."

Right Age for an Actress.

In "The Diary of a Beauty" published in the Woman's Home Companion, appeared the following: "The stage is an ungrateful profession, and no woman can count on her public one day after she can no longer appear thirty-five years of age."

Cheerfulness.

What, indeed, does not that word cheerfulness imply. It means a contented spirit, it means a pure heart, it means a kind and loving disposition, it means humility and charity, it means a generous appreciation of others and a modest opinion of self.—

music.

Development of Sympathy.

It may, indeed, be said that sympathy exists in all minds, as Faraday has discovered that magnetism exists in all metals; but a certain temperature is required to develop the hidden property, whether in the metal or the mind.
—Bulwer.

Boon for Jealous Wives.

A small crowd had gathered outside the store window where an automatic typewriter was on exhibition.
Two women stopped and peered in, interestedly watching the keys bob up and down apparently of themselves.
Presently one of the women turning to her companion remarked: "Jenny, that's the kind of a typewriter your husband should have in his office instead of that blonde-haired thing."

MOISTURE AND HEAT.

Why a Person May Feel Cold in a Room That is Well Heated.

It often happens in winter that a person living in a steam heated apartment feels cold even when the thermometer shows the necessary degree of warmth in the room. Of course there is a reason for this and also a very simple remedy. The reason is that the air in the room is too dry—it does not contain enough moisture—and the remedy is, of course, to keep some water in the room all the time, so that it can evaporate into the air.

Our bodies, you see, are at all times exuding moisture in the form of perspiration. Now, this perspiration, even in winter, amounts to a great deal more than one would think, being measured in the pints. To evaporate water heat has to be used up, and, as the body is warmer than the air, the heat to evaporate this perspiration is taken from the body. Of course then the body feels cold.

Here is still another illustration of this fact: It has been shown by actual experiment that a man can stay in an oven heated to the boiling temperature of water and not get uncomfortably hot—that is, painfully hot. The heat makes him perspire, and the heat taken up by evaporation from the body keeps the body from getting hot. But suppose that the oven already contained in its atmosphere all the water vapor that it could hold. Then, as none could evaporate from the body, the drops on the body would soon get near the boiling point. So in the room referred to above, if it contains a good bit of moisture the evaporation from the body will not be so fast, and consequently the body will not feel cold.—New York American.

Momentum and Velocity.

In answer to the question "Is it not velocity that produces gravitation? If we throw a stone against a window of sufficient resistance with too little velocity it will not break, but if we throw it with sufficient velocity the window will break," the New York American says:

"We do not know the cause of gravitation nor of anything, but the increased speed of a stone thrown is not the cause of gravitation; it is the cause of momentum, which is a product of mass multiplied by velocity. Momentum would be the same if the stone were thrown close to the earth, where the full attraction of its gravitation would be felt, or out in space trillions of miles, where the earth's gravitation would be almost infinitesimal—that is, the glass would break by increasing the speed of the stone as here on earth."

A Clear Wind Shield.

A doctor living in a rainy climate whose calls took him out often in wet weather undertook the problem of maintaining clear vision through the wind shield of his automobile regardless of rain, and he succeeded in making a prescription that would do the work. The prescription calls for one ounce of water, two ounces of glycerin and one dram of salt. This is poured on a piece of gauze and then wiped over the glass, care being taken to have all the strokes downward. The effect of the treatment is to prevent raindrops from clinging to the glass.—
Saturday Evening Post.

Crafty Woman.

"What an insufferably conceited air Pinkley has!"
"It's all his wife's fault!"
"What has she done?"
"She makes him believe she is hor-ribly jealous." "Jealous of Pinkley? What's her object?"
"It's the only way she can get any money out of him."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Hiram at college. He said he finished the hundred in ten seconds. Mr. Way-come right home. If he's spending at that rate it'll cost me about $4,000,000 a month to send him there.—Puck.

and also a song by the primary department. The chapel was prettily decorated

"Of course we are going to Cape Cod again this summer, but that doesn't mean that you and I are to be separated all the time. You must call me up occasionally, and I'll call you, too—it is so easy to make a toll call, you know. Are you really going to visit the Adams'? That's simply fine—you and Ned must visit us also. Ned is going to Cape Ann as usual and Fred and his wife will be in the Berkshires. They'll be glad when you call them. Sign Did the Work.

"Don't knock on the glass with your hand; you might hurt it. Use a sledge hammer." That's the ironic notice to be read on the window of a New York vermin exterminator's shop. Inside the window are three or four ferrets, trained to hunt rats. Before the shop owner put the sign on the window tapping on the glass to arouse the ferrets was one of the favorite sports of the neighborhood.

First Hours of Sleep the Best.

It has been proved conclusively that the first hours of sleep are deeper than the rest and that with the length the tendency to wake at any noise increases. From this follows the recuperative value of the few first hours of deep sleep and the explanation why men of great energy like Napoleon, Frederick the Great and Virchow were completely satisfied with a sleep of from three to four hours.

Emotions Disturb Digestion.

Worry and distress, rage and excitement, fear and anger cause the muscles of the stomach and the rest of the alimentary channel to stop action. These emotions also stop the juices of digestion from flowing.

GRANDMOTHER'S SOLOQUY

By Jennie F. Stoddard.

It will be lonely in the future, in "My Old Kentucky Home", for my granddaughter, "Annie Laurie", is to be married to "Robin Adair" as soon as her brother, "Johnny Comes Marching Home" from war, where he has been carrying "The Star Spangled Banner".

In all "America", there is not a better grandson, but "Where Is My Wandering Boy?" On that day, before his regiment went "Marching Through Georgia", he said, as he kissed me "Good Bye", "How Can I Ever Leave Thee?"

My old eyes were dim with tears, as I heard that "Soldier's Farewell", "Just Before The Battle". In the days of "Auld Lang Syne" I thought there was no place like "Home Sweet Home", but when Annie's grandfather told me "The Old, Old Story", "Love's Old Sweet Song", I did just what she is going to do; left "The Old Folks At Home".

I shall never forget the pleading look in my dear mother's eyes, when she said at parting, "You'll Remember Me?" I never felt that I could "Take Back The Heart" I gave him as we were "Coming Through The Rye", when "The Last Rose Of Summer" was falling from its stem, and now that he has gone from me, and is "Rocked In The Cradle Of The Deep".

"By The Sad Sea Waves", I seem to live over the dear, old days when we drank sweet draughts from "The Old Oaken Bucket", and "Grandfather's Clock" ticked loudly on the stairs.

I "Listen To The Mocking Bird" as I sit in "The Old Armchair", and "With Heart Bowed Down", I dream of the days when my "Old Robin Gray" did "Abide With Me", and I hear "The Missionary Chant" his "Song At Twilight". "Oft In The Silly Night", I hear his dear voice "Calling Me", "The Sweet Hour Of Prayer" is at hand, and it is "One Sweetly Solemn Thought" that in "The Sweet Bye And Bye", "We'll Meet Again", and "There Will Be Rest For The Weary" and "Wonderful Peace".

Mystery of A Taxicab

Clever Thief Meets Her Match
In a Shrewd Lawyer
By CLARISSA MACKIE

"It is too hot to work," exclaimed Dick Harley, the senior member of the young law firm of Harley & Rogers. "We can congratulate ourselves that business is extremely dull with us at present," grinned Rogers. "Between these summer court sessions—"

"I beg pardon, Mr. Harley, but there is a lady outside who is very anxious to consult you," interrupted the stenographer as she laid a card before the senior partner.

Harley picked up the card and read the engraved name, "Mrs. Cynthia Loring Woods."

"Show her in, Miss Brown," said Harley, arising and setting forth a comfortable chair for the expected visitor.

Rogers disappeared in his own adjoining office and closed the door, but Harley opened it again, with a brief remark to his partner.

"Leave it open, Rogers. It may be one of these detective cases, and if so it will save me a lot of explaining if you get the gist of the matter this way."

Mrs. Cynthia Loring Woods was a tall and lovely young woman, gowned in white linen and wearing a smart white hat on her dark hair.

She sank gracefully into the chair Harley brought for her, and when the young lawyer was also seated she plunged directly into business.

"Mr. Harley, I understand that you and your partner are especially clever in unravelling mysteries of a nature too delicate to be entrusted to the ordinary detective agency. Mr. Oldershaw directed me to your firm." She smiled charmingly upon Harley and quite captivated him.

"Yes, Mrs. Woods, we have been rather successful with that sort of work—of course, you understand that undertakings of that character are merely a side issue in our law business. As a matter of fact, both Mr. Rogers and myself are fond of unravelling mysteries and look up the cases that come our way as a diversion rather than as actual work."

"Never mind," she nodded eagerly. "Just help me out of this difficulty and I shall always be grateful to you. It is such a delicate matter—and involves a very dear friend"—She paused and bit her lip as if undecided whether to confide in the lawyer after all.

"Anything you may say to us is held in strictest confidence," remarked Harley earnestly.

Mrs. Woods leaned forward. "Then I shall tell you without reservation," she began in a low, clear voice that reached Rogers in the next office.

"I want someone to tell me where my string of pearls went to. Yesterday afternoon just at sunset I sat in the drawingroom of my home in East Eighty-second street conversing with a very dear friend. We were drinking tea and chatting gaily when I decided to show her a string of valuable pearls which my husband had given me that day as a birthday present.

"I rang for my maid and directed her to bring them down to me from the safe in my bedroom. She brought the box and I showed the pearls to my friend, Mrs. Smith.

"We duly admired them and laid them in the jewel case on the table at my elbow. The lid of the jewel case was raised and the sun shone on the pearls and turned them to the most lovely pink. Mrs. Smith and I both commented on their wondrous beauty and then we fell to admiring a little French poodle, Trixie, which Mrs. Smith held in her arms.

"Although I am not fond of toy dogs myself, this long haired mite was very cunning and performed a number of clever tricks. Just as Mrs. Smith was leaving the house I was called to the telephone, and when I turned around to the table once more the pearls were gone. I have not dared tell Mr. Woods as yet; I am hoping to recover them before he learns of the theft."

"This happened yesterday afternoon?" asked Harley.

"Yes."

"Why did you not call upon me early this morning, or telephone?"

Mrs. Woods hesitated a moment, then she said frankly:

"Because I have been so puzzled about what happened immediately afterward that I could make neither head nor tail of the mystery."

"Please tell me what happened."

"As soon as I discovered the loss of the pearls I went to the window to see if Edith had actually departed. There was a yellow taxicab drawing away from the curb, and as I looked it suddenly speeded around the corner and disappeared down the avenue. I was surprised at sight of the taxi because Edith has her own electric brougham, and I supposed she had arrived in that. She rarely uses public vehicles. I called a servant and inquired if Mrs. Smith had come in that taxicab, and the man said she had and that she had departed in it.

"I was so wrought up over the loss of the pearls that I went to the telephone and called Mrs. Smith's hotel, asking them to have her call me as soon as she arrived there. To my surprise they said she was at home and would speak to me, and when she came to the telephone you can imagine my amazement when she told me that she had not been out that day—she had been confined to the house with an attack of neuralgia. She could not understand my allusions to her call upon me.

"Immediately I rang for my motor, and in fifteen minutes I was closeted with Mrs. Smith in her sitting room at the hotel. You can imagine my amazement when she positively denied having seen me before that day, and she was looking so very ill that I was compelled to believe her. I told her about our conversation, which was of a careless, chattering nature, as between old friends, and I repeated the story of showing her the pearls and recalled to her mind about Trixie and his clever tricks, but Edith only shook her head and looked at me pityingly. Then she rang for her maid and sent for Trixie.

"Honoria, the maid, brought the little dog to her mistress and said emphatically that the dog had not been out of the house that day."

Mrs. Woods paused and looked at the lawyer.

"Well," she asked expectantly, "what do you make of my mystery, Mr. Harley? Who came in the yellow taxicab if it was not Edith Smith?"

"Please tell me as nearly as you can recollect the last impression you have of your friend before she left the room. What was she doing?"

"I was sitting at the telephone, and I called a farewell over my shoulder, excusing myself as I did so. She stood Trixie on the table and came over and kissed me. Then she went back to the table, picked up the dog and went out."

"And Trixie was standing on the same table where the string of pearls was lying?"

"Yes."

"Please describe Mrs. Smith to me. Tell me what she wore."

"She is a small, fair woman, with regular features—in fact, she is very pretty. She was wearing a dainty gown of summer silk and her face was swathed in a white chiffon veil—she said that she had been suffering from neuralgia and dared not remove it. I was surprised, because the day was very warm, as you may recollect. She lifted the veil when she drank her tea, but only showing the line of her lips, and I was rather surprised to note that she had rouged her lips and tinted her cheeks. Edith has always been very emphatic in her dislike of such subterfuges of the toilet."

"Please describe Mrs. Smith's maid, Honoria."

"Honoria? I hardly know, Mr. Harley. She has been with Edith a very short time, but I understand she is invaluable in her position and came highly recommended. She is small—smaller than Edith—pale and mousey looking—not pretty—well, one of those people who look like almost any one—straight features, not very young, with sandy hair and complexion—that is as close a description as I can remember."

"And she has been present a number of times when you have been to see Mrs. Smith?"

"Yes. Edith has been ill more or less all summer and I have visited her in her room at the hotel. Honoria has sat sewing near by ready to wait upon her mistress."

"Did Mrs. Smith tell you that the maid had been absent yesterday?"

"She didn't say, Mr. Harley. She merely explained that she herself had slept from luncheon time until I called her on the telephone."

Harley sat in deep thought for some time. Then he excused himself and went into the next room, where he talked with his partner for a while. When he returned to his own office he closed the door, but the low rumble of Rogers' voice over the telephone could be distinctly heard.

"Do you think you can help me?" asked Mrs. Woods anxiously.

"Yes, Mrs. Woods. Not only do I believe I can help you, but I am sure that the mystery will be solved before you leave my office."

"Oh, you must be a wizard!" she laughed with delight.

"We have put two and two together, that is all," said Harley modestly. "You have given such a clear and lucid account of the matter that it is quite easy of solution if our suspicions are correct."

"I have consulted with Mr. Rogers, my partner, and he is in communication with the hotel where Mrs. Smith is stopping."

"Oh, you have never suspected Edith; she is the soul of honor!" cried Mrs. Woods in genuine distress.

"But Honoria may not be the soul of honor," smiled Harley gravely.

"What do you mean?"

"Only that we suspect that Honoria is a very clever actress—that she may have heard you telephone to her mistress to come down and see your pearls. You did tell Mrs. Smith about them?"

"Why, yes. I was so delighted with my gift that I called on the telephone and told her about them and asked her to stop in and drink a cup of tea with me and I would show them to her."

"When was that?"

"Yesterday, directly after luncheon."

"Did Mrs. Smith answer the telephone?"

"No, it was Honoria. She said she would give my message to her mistress, who was dressing to go out."

"While Mrs. Smith was actually asleep at the time," said Harley in a musing tone.

"Yes—why, how do you suspect Honoria—why?"—Mrs. Woods paused in bewilderment.

"Honoria purposely led you astray concerning her mistress. When she heard about the pearls she determined to possess herself of them, and she did so in a most daring and original manner."

"She dressed herself in one of Mrs. Smith's gowns—put on a thick veil under the excuse of neuralgia, from which her mistress was a well known sufferer. She took Trixie, the dog, and, not daring to call her mistress' own motorcar, she went in a taxicab to take tea with you and look at the pearls."

"From her knowledge of your friendship with Mrs. Smith she was able to keep up a light conversation, for, believe me, you will find that Honoria is no ordinary lady's maid, but a clever thief. The call to the telephone was opportune for her purpose. She placed Trixie on the table, and when she picked the poodle up again she brought with her concealed in the little animal's long hair the string of pearls. No wonder she hurried away in her yellow taxicab."

"WE HAVE CAUGHT THE THIEF," HE SAID.

"What I cannot understand is why she should return to the hotel and resume her duties as maid when she might have known that her trick would be discovered as soon as you communicated with Mrs. Smith."

The telephone bell rang sharply, and Harley listened intently. A satisfied smile overspread his countenance, and he nodded his head as he hung up the receiver, with a brief word of congratulation to the speaker at the other end of the wire.

"We caught her," he said, turning to his client, with a beaming face.

"Honoria?" exclaimed Mrs. Woods incredulously.

"Yes. When my partner called the hotel and asked for Honoria's whereabouts the hotel manager told him that the woman had left some time in the night and that Mrs. Smith was frantic, especially as Honoria had taken Trixie with her. Probably thought the dog was an excellent accomplice and would be useful to her in the future."

"Rogers rushed down to the hotel, found the yellow taxicab which had taken the woman to your house yesterday, discovered that the same man had seen the woman enter another taxi at 11 o'clock the night before, and through that driver, who was acquainted with the chauffeur of the second car, we found that the woman had been driven to another hotel on the east side, and there my partner and the police detectives arrested her just as she was preparing to leave to catch a steamer sailing for the south."

"Trixie was with her, and a search of the woman discovered the string of pearls which she stole from you yesterday afternoon. Rogers and a detective are returning here with the pearls so that you may identify them. I hardly see, however, how you can keep the affair from the knowledge of Mr. Woods, for you will have to appear against the woman."

Mrs. Woods leaned forward eagerly. "I would tell Charles anyway, because he must know how clever you have been," she cried enthusiastically. "To think that only two hours have elapsed since I entered your office and the mystery of the yellow taxicab and the lost pearls has been solved!"

Harley smiled.

"I'm only sorry," he admitted, "that the whole thing has wound up so quickly. I was looking forward to unravelling a long mystery and enjoying every stitch of it."

"I must go and tell Edith all about it," said Mrs. Woods as she arose to go.

When Harley and Rogers received Mr. Woods' check they took the money and enjoyed a month's vacation far from the big city and its delightful mysteries.

The Perfect Husband.
My perfect husband, among a great many other qualities, must love like a Frenchman, attend to business like an American and dress like an Englishman. I have come back from America with a great admiration for the American man's devotion to business. If one were permitted to have three husbands he should certainly be one of them. This is how I would divide their labor: The Frenchman should be for the home, the Englishman for the street and the American for the office.—Polaire in London Chronicle.

Fortunate Provision.
"Nature's works are marvelous." "Yes. Isn't it fortunate that she provided every woman with some real hair to pin braids and switches to."

Some Bootless Remarks.
The whole-soled fellow is not half so likely to go on his uppers as the half-soled ones. The former is usually better heeled and doesn't peg out and leave a fellow in the lurch when he finds it necessary to revamp his fortunes after business affairs have run counter to his desires.

A Legend of Switzerland

By F. A. MITCHEL

In those days when the confederated states of Switzerland were fighting to free themselves from Rudolph, Duke of Hapsburg, whose descendants now sit on the throne of Austria, four cantons, Lucerne, Schwyz, Uri and Unterwalden, formed the original nucleus of the Swiss republic. Now, there was a time when both Rudolph and the four cantons were anxious to form an alliance with Zurich.

The heads of the four cantons got together and sent a spy to Rudolph's court with a view to heading him off in his negotiations with Zurich. The name of this man was Thorwald, and he took with him his daughter, Anna. The two settled themselves at the base of Rudolph's castle and waited an opportunity to make his acquaintance. Anna was fond of painting and occupied herself sketching the Austrian scenery about her. One day while she was sitting on a rock just beneath the base of the duke's castle painting the valley below Rudolph rode by and, seeing the maiden at work, stopped to look at what was on her canvas. So pleased was he that he bought her picture and gave her orders for others. Thus did Thorwald through Anna gain access to the duke.

Thorwald wormed himself into the confidence of Rudolph, pretending that, though a Swiss by birth, he was an Austrian in feeling. He endeavored to persuade the duke to send him on a mission to Zurich for the purpose of persuading the authorities to submit themselves to the house of Hapsburg. But Rudolph was too shrewd to trust any but an Austrian born on such an important mission and sent one of his tried ministers, Count Rapperswill.

Count Rapperswill was a soldier as well as a diplomat and in one of his battles had lost an eye, which had been taken out of its socket. Thorwald no sooner heard that the count was to go to Zurich than he began to think how he could cause his mission to result in failure. Meeting Rapperswill, he asked him why he did not wear a glass eye in the empty socket. The count replied that he had tried to find an eye that would match the natural one, but had failed. Thorwald told him that if he would give his daughter Anna a glass eye and sit for her to paint it he would guarantee that she would do the work to perfection. To this the count gladly agreed.

The next day he appeared at Thorwald's lodgings with one of the artificial eyes he had discarded and asked Anna to paint it to match his natural eye. Anna did so, but was not satisfied with her work till the count had given her a number of sittings. The truth is her father had instructed her to put off finishing her work till the count was ready to set off for Zurich. Rapperswill was delighted with the eye as it was and begged for it, but received it only at the last moment.

Count Rapperswill had scarcely departed before Thorwald and Anna set out in great haste for Lucerne, and Thorwald told the governors of the four cantons to send an ambassador at once to Zurich to meet and defeat if possible the one sent by the Duke of Hapsburg. Thorwald could not go himself, for he would be recognized by Rapperswill. So one Thunwalder was sent at Thorwald's suggestion, not because of his shrewdness, but because he possessed a very amiable countenance.

The two diplomats arrived at Zurich at the same time, and a meeting was called of the government authorities to hear their arguments and decide between them. Rapperswill with true Austrian arrogance claimed to speak first and last, and the amiable Thunwalder assented.

Count Rapperswill was an admirable speaker and presented his case remarkably well. But he had not been speaking long before his auditors noticed a very crafty look in one of his eyes. This naturally prejudiced them against him, and the longer he spoke—their crafty eye giving a crafty interpretation to everything he said—the greater grew the prejudice.

When he had finished the opening address and Thunwalder arose, the envoy of the confederates being a very tall man, the audience expected to hear him bellow like a bull. Instead, he spoke with a soft voice and great complaisance. He had scarcely opened his mouth before he won the entire confidence of his hearers, and when he sat down he was greeted with a round of applause.

The Austrian ambassador, at a loss to know why he was making a failure at the hands of one who made no effective argument, arose to finish with a determination to meet Thunwalder's amiability in kind. He spoke with frankness and a great regard for the Swiss people and their interests. That crafty eye bellowed him. It seemed to those who saw and heard his voice that he meant the opposite of every word he spoke. When he had finished he was greeted with a grim silence.

The four cantons had won, and Zurich entered the confederation. Thorwald was made a baron, and his daughter, who had put the crafty look in the artificial eye, was presented with a thousand florins and voted the freedom of Lucerne.

This episode in the formation of the Swiss confederation is not mentioned in history, but there is no historical reference to the legend of William Tell.

FLOGGED OUT OF THE ARMY.

Melancholy Fate of "The Whistler at the Plow."

Among the many pen names of the past "The Whistler at the Plow" was the happiest. It was chosen by Alexander Somerville, long since dead, who wrote the sweetest prose ever penned about the fields and woods and hamlets and the beasts, birds, reptiles and people of Canada.

I glimpsed him once—a stupendous Scot, with long white hair hanging over his shoulders and an expression of supreme sadness on the noble face. But he had the clear blue eyes of the Scot—an eye that had an amber glint in it when he was roused.

He was an ex-soldier, but he did not serve out his term of enlistment in the army; neither did he get an honorable discharge.

Alexander Somerville was a private in one of the crack cavalry regiments of Great Britain and Ireland—I think it was the famous Scots Greys, but I am not sure. He must have been a magnificent looking soldier.

At the time of the great Chartist movement in England he was stationed with his regiment somewhere in the Midlands. The Chartists were looked upon as an incipient French revolution. Their meetings were forbidden, coercive measures were undertaken, and things began to look bad. The Chartists—honest, I can't tell you what a Chartist was, but he was, I fancy, an ultra Liberal or Radical of those days—decided to hold a procession. The authorities decided to prevent it, and a bloody clash was billed for the next Sunday.

The Scots Greys were ordered to rough what their sabers in preparation to resist the mob. A sabre so treated breaks bones and tears and bruises the flesh, but it doesn't sink deep. It was a terrible order, and Alexander Somerville, the future "Whistler at the Plow," refused to obey. He could not draw his sword on his fellow countrymen who were demanding liberty.

A corporal's guard seized Private Alexander Somerville. He was tried for insubordination by a court martial and was sentenced to be flogged and then dismissed from the army. He suffered a fearful flogging, with the whole garrison and as many of the citizens as could see looking on—suffered without a cry or a groan—and when the cruel, brutal business—a business that would have made Sitting Bull or Red Cloud miserably ashamed—was over he came out to this free land, a lone, broken and melancholy man, to sing of freedom among the free hills.

Laying Bridge Floors.

The most interesting and dangerous looking stage in the construction of a suspension bridge is the building of the floor, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. In this work the builders have nothing to rest their work on and must build out each way from the towers, securing the floor piece by piece to the main cables far above. The work is done with derricks that are equipped with booms long enough to reach out ahead of the finished structure and hold the girders suspended while they are being riveted in place. As each section of the floor is completed the derricks are moved ahead and the construction of the next section is begun.

He Was the Whole Cabinet.

The record concentration of office into a single hand was achieved by the Duke of Wellington in 1834, when William IV. suddenly parted with his Whig ministers. Sir Robert Peel, who was to form the new ministry, was in Rome, and it took between three and four weeks for the king's messenger to reach him and for him to return, traveling almost continuously night and day. In the meantime Wellington was practically the entire government. He really held the offices only of first lord of the treasury and home secretary, but any one of the secretaries of state can perform the duties of any other or all of them, and this Wellington actually did.—Westminster Gazette.

The Ambiguous Phonetic.

Phonetic spelling has many recommendations, but if you spell by speech and ear you may print ambiguously. For instance, Mr. Escott, in his "Club Makers and Club Members," gives the history of White's club "till it reached its present proprietor and analyst." Now "annalist" and "analyst" are pronounced alike, but printing would lose in clearness if they were spelled alike.—London Standard.

Stone Age Love Letters.

"What do you suppose a rejected suitor did in the stone age when a young woman sent back all his love letters?"

"If he was a sensible sort of fellow he probably built a house with them and put another woman in it."—Baltimore Sun.

The Boy at Beechenbrook

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.

I was employed at the age of sixteen in a London bookstore and sent by it to Beechenbrook, a large house a little outside of Manchester. I was to arrange in the library a large lot of books ordered from our store. On the day I arrived the owner's wife and daughter started for Scotland on a visit, while Mr. Markham himself departed for Paris to attend to certain business.

He had departed so suddenly that plate and all other valuables were left in the house, though he hired a private watchman to look after the house at night. This man was named Haynes, and almost at once I learned that he was a drinking man and had made up his mind to take things very easy. Something had gone wrong with the drainage, and the pipes had been uncovered at the back of the house. Repairs had been made, but the ditch was not to be filled in until Mr. Markham returned.

Things went along all right for a week, and if any of the servants feared a visit from burglars nothing had been said to me about it. About half past 10 one night I suddenly awoke in a great fright. I could not remember that I had dreamed of anything, nor could I say that my sleep had been broken by a noise. My room was dark, and outside there was a monotonous pour of a September rain. I had to taunt myself with being a coward before I dared to get up and light my candle, and, though I had little courage to spare, even when I found nothing wrong I determined to go downstairs and have a word with the watchman. I laid my hand on the door to find it locked. I had never locked my door at night and had never seen a key on either side of it. To find that some one had locked me in while I slept frightened me badly for a few minutes. I had been given a maid's room, and there was a door leading into another bedroom. This second bedroom was an inside room, and a door led into a third, which cornered on the hall. The hall door of this last room was not locked.

I hitched myself down the stairs an inch at a time, and then on hands and knees I began creeping across the parlor. I had been in this room a dozen times and knew the location of the various pieces of furniture. I had an idea that the watchman used this room as his headquarters, as a leather covered lounge had been wheeled into it from the library. As I crept across the room I heard a snore from the direction of this lounge, and, deviating from my course, I made for it to find the watchman stretched out at full length and fast asleep.

I decided to get out of the house and arouse the gardener and get the police from the station, two miles away. I crept back to the hall, across into the drawing room, and at the far end of the big room I raised the window and stepped to the ground. Once out I made my way to the stables, but there a surprise awaited me. I found a horse hitched to a car and the gardener and head groom standing beside the vehicle. The plunder was to be carried off in that car, and three men were in league with the robbers. It came to me like a flash and in time to save myself, and I drew back and wondered what I should do. I was all for preventing the robbery, and pretty soon I skulked back to the open window.

When I had re-entered the house and crept back to the door leading into the dining room the fellows were working at the plate room door with iron bars. Five minutes later they had it open, and then the groom passed out piece after piece, while the robbers deposited them in their sacks.

I had been watching everything in a helpless way, having no plan and no hope, and it was only when the men shouldered the sacks to carry them out that I made a move. I determined to try the effect of a scare, and as the last of them stepped outdoors I fired my pistol into the sack on his back and shouted at the top of my voice. All three men started to run. The groom threw down his sack, but the robbers clung to theirs. They all knew about the ditch, but in the darkness and confusion they made right for it and tumbled in, one after the other. As they went in I fired two shots in the direction of the stables. Both cut the two men there so close that they took to their heels, and thus with three shots and four yells I had scared off the whole gang. I had even done better. In falling into the ditch the three fellows were badly knocked about, and when it came to climbing out they couldn't do it, especially as I was there with my pistol in hand and threatened to shoot the first man who showed his head.

The row awakened the women, and when they came to know what had happened they took the horse and cart and went for the police, while I continued to stand guard. In an hour we had the men out and handcuffed, and next day the other two were arrested twenty miles away. Mr. Markham rewarded me so liberally that it was made a red letter night in my life. The police growled at my way of doing things, as a matter of course; but, on the other hand, a hundred different newspapers said "the boy at Beechenbrook" deserved unstinted praise for his conduct, and so on, and, on the whole, I have always felt rather proud of the affair.

Beachey at Brockton.

Lincoln Beachey, the bird man who has startled the world with his antics in mid-air, has been secured by the management of the Brockton Fair, and will appear each day Sept. 29, 30, Oct. 1 and 2.

In addition to flying upside down and looping-the-loop, Beachey has just originated a new one which he styles the "Tango Dip." The above is a very clear diagram of this new evolution, drawn by its originator, and should be a great help to all who have a desire to try any flights in fact or fancy.

Beachey will fly at Brockton every day, rain or shine, and will not appear at any other fair in New England.

Annual Christian Endeavor Meeting.

The climax was reached for the year's work of the C. E. society connected with the East Weymouth Congregational church last Friday evening when the annual meeting was held in the church parlor and dining room.

At six o'clock the members congregated in the parlor and greeted each other in true C. E. style.

At half past six all adjourned to the dining room, where a splendid banquet was served under the supervision of William J. Rix, chairman of the social committee, and words cannot express the approval of the members of the service rendered and excellent repast served.

Following the banquet the business meeting was called to order by the president and the reports of the different committees were read, which showed that much good work had been accomplished during the past year.

Plans for bettering the society and furthering the work were discussed and after a few words by the minister, Rev. E. T. Ford, D. D., officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: president, Adella G. Rix; chr. prayer-meeting committee, Susie A. Humphrey; chr. missionary committee, Beatrice Denbroeder; chr. social committee, Mildred W. Newcomb; chr. lookout committee, Emerson R. Dizer; secretary, Norman E. Dizer; treasurer, Wendell Studley.

From 8.30 till 10 a social time was enjoyed by all and they left for their homes with happy recollections of the annual meeting of 1914 and bright outlooks for the year 1914-1915.

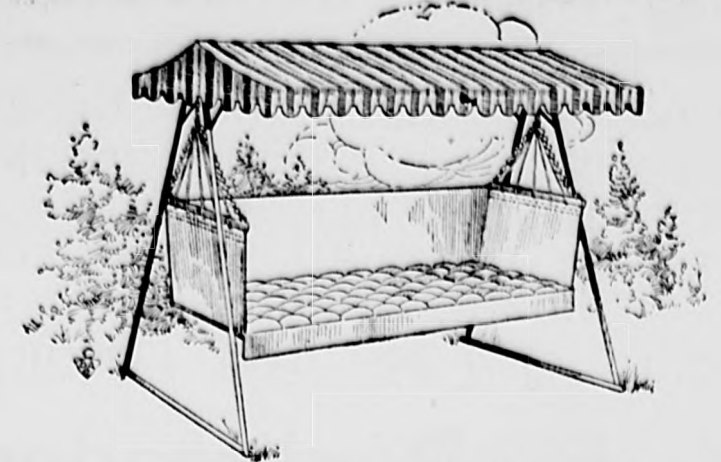

Scheme Didn't Work.

"We thought we'd rather move than clean house." "Great scheme!" "Unfortunately, the same idea had occurred to the people who vacated the house we moved into."

Why the Boiler Rumbles.

That noisy rumbling and clattering in the kitchen boiler after the gas water heater has been lighted for some time has scared many a woman. The editor of Monthly Gas Chat says it need alarm no one, as it is caused by the expansion of the water as it is heated from the top of the boiler. The colder water below, rushing up to displace the expanded water above, will often cause a concussion.

Heaven's Mercies Many.

So thick do Heaven's mercies fly that the arrow of prayer can never be shot aright without bringing down some blessing. If it bring not that which we seek it shall bring us that which we need.—Mark Guy Pearse.
